Kills Young Wife In Office Building
E.J. MacDonald Fires Three Times at Woman, in Fifth Floor Corridor
Death Comes Hour Later in Hospital
Slayer Submits Quietly to Arrest After Committing Deed
Refuses To Talk of Case
Couple Were Separated Six Months Ago and Had Met Today by Special Appointment

Mrs. Gertrude MacDonald, twenty-four years old, of 928 I street northwest, was shot and fatally wounded by her husband, Edward J. MacDonald, at 1:30 o'clock this afternoon, in the fifth floor corridor of the Colorado building.

MacDonald pulled the trigger of the .38-caliber revolver four times, and three of the bullets penetrated his wife's body, one striking in the mouth, another in the left eye, and a third in the left shoulder. One shell in the revolver missed fire.

Mrs. MacDonald was carried in a dying condition to the Emergency Hospital, and her husband, who made no attempt to resist arrest, was taken to the first precinct police station.

Mrs. MacDonald was placed on the operating table immediately, but died in less than an hour.

Couple Had Been Separated
The couple were separated, and they met by appointment this morning in the office of an attorney on the fifth floor of the Colorado building. Certain moneys were coming to MacDonald, and it was necessary for his wife to sign the papers in order that he might get it.

Whether they were quarreling about this will be known only from the story MacDonald may tell later, but the first time the man and wife were noticed was when Miss M.H. Moore, a stenographer employed in the office of George W. Blankenship, was going toward the elevators to go out to lunch. She noticed the couple talking quietly, saw MacDonald take his wife by the arm. MacDonald's remark to his wife was inaudible, but Miss Moore heard Mrs. MacDonald say:

"Oh, I guess not," and with the remark Mrs. MacDonald laughed.

Woman's Sister Rushes Up
The elevator, with Miss Moore as a passenger, had just started downward when three shots rang out in quick succession.

Lemuel R. Fugitt, whose officers are on the fifth floor, rushed into the hallway and grabbed MacDonald by both arms. The man readily gave up the revolver, but just as he did so Mrs. MacDonald's sister, Mrs. Martha Bullock, who had been waiting on a lower floor, reached the scene. She accused MacDonald of the crime, and to her he replied:

"Yes, I have killed her, and you are the cause of all my troubles."

Other tenants in the building ran to the street and summoned Crossing Policeman Robert Kramer, to whom MacDonald surrendered. He was taken a prisoner to the first precinct station

Positively Refuses to Talk
Standing before the railing in the station house, MacDonald was obviously completely unnerved, and seemed only to stand by supporting himself against the woodwork. He developed a stubborn streak and, although papers were found in his pocket bearing the name of Edward J. MacDonald, he refused absolutely to admit that that was his name or to make a statement of any kind about the crime. He declined to give his age, but appeared to be about thirty-seven or thirty-eight years old.

Although it was possible to secure only fragmentary history of the couple this afternoon, it was said that they married about six years ago. At that time MacDonald, it is stated, told his wife he was from New York, but it seems she was never able to verify that statement.

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery

Last Updated: 02/12/15
When the MacDonaldis separated six months ago Mrs. MacDonald went to New York city. MacDonald had been writing to his wife, addressing her through Mrs. Bulloch, because he did not know her address there. In response to his entreaties she returned to this city three days ago, and their meeting at the Colorado building this afternoon was the outcome.

None of Mrs. MacDonald's relatives knew whether the young couple intended to see a lawyer this morning to arrange for a final separation or to effect a reconciliation. At any rate, it seems it was necessary for them to sign certain papers jointly, and this probably precipitated the trouble.

When MacDonald drew his revolver and fired his wife fell at the first shot, but he continued to point the revolver at her and to pull the trigger as fast she could, ceasing firing only when he believed he had killed his wife. The first spectators to reach the scene saw him standing, with the still smoking revolver in his hand, looking down at his victim.

Dr. Harry N. Kaufman happened to be in the building, and he gave first-aid treatment before the ambulance from the hospital arrived. To avoid the crowd the injured woman was carried to the rear of the building and lowered to the first floor on the freight elevator and placed in the ambulance.

Has No Regular Employment
As a result of their preliminary investigation in the case the police stated this afternoon that MacDonald has no regular employment, but that during the Christmas holidays he was a bar tender in McDonald's saloon, at 12th and B streets northwest. He is in no way related to the owner of the saloon. The police also stated that MacDonald was an ex-soldier and that he had served a term of one year in the soldiers' prison on Governors Island on a charge of desertion.

Although MacDonald has said nothing to the police in response to their many questions persons who witnessed his arrest say that he made this declamatio:

"I got her and I guess I'll hang for it. That's to be seen."

Wife Slayer Held
Coroner's Jury Places Murder Charge Against MacDonald
Story of Tragedy Told
Witnesses Describe Scenes Before and After the Shooting
None Saw The Shots Fired
Prisoner, Nervous in His Cell, Says He Will Be Able to Justify Deed
Edward J. MacDonald, who shot and killed his wife, Gertrude MacDonald, yesterday afternoon in the corridor of the fifth floor of the Colorado building, is held for the action of the grand jury on the charge of murder, on the verdict of a coroner's jury, rendered today at the morgue.

The defenses will probably be insanity when the case comes to trial. While no evidence of the sort was presented to the coroner's jury, it is understood that an attempt to place MacDonald in a sanitarium under the charge of alienists was made several years ago.

Eight witnesses were heard by the jury. A number of them, business men, lawyer and a girl stenographer, testified to circumstances preceding and following the tragedy. There were no eye-witnesses except the principals. Mrs. Martha Billop, sister of the dead girl, repeated her story of how the couple came together by appointment.

Both the sister and Policeman Cramer told of charges made by the wife-slayer against the sister when she accused him of killing her sister. "It's your fault," declared MacDonald; and the policeman declares that he made an effort then to break away from him and attack Mrs. Billop. He says his prisoner lunged toward the woman several times, although he made no other resistance to arrest.

The policeman have testimony of bitter language used toward the sister, of which no other witness told on the stand. Mrs. Billop said she had no understanding of his accusation, especially as she had been the chief instrument, at his solicitation, to bring the couple together.

Lawyer Fugitt's Testimony
Lemuel Fugitt, a lawyer, with offices in room 505, on the fifth floor of the Colorado building, told of hearing the shots while in his office, of running into the corridor, of disarming the wife slayer and of holding him... while the police came. The prisoner, he said, asked him not to hold him so tight, and said no other word, although his eyes filled with tears when the lawyer expressed pity for his deed.

Mr. Fugitt said that he detected the odor of intoxicants on the breath of MacDonald, and considered that his bearing was indicative of drunkenness. Other witnesses testified that MacDonald bore himself as if in a stupor, and declared that he kept his eyes fixed on vacancy, during the time he was held awaiting the arrival of the police.

Margaret Moore, stenographer, on her way from the office of Mr. Blankinship, in room 527, on the fifth floor of the Colorado building, observed the couple in the corridor, and her interest was excited by the manner of the woman. She was not around when the shots were fired.

Heard Victim Laughing

She said that Mrs. MacDonald threw back her head and laughed scornfully at some remark of her husband, who then seized her arm angrily. Mrs. MacDonald stepped back, said the witness. As Miss Moore entered the elevator to descend, she heard the woman say, "Well, I guess not," and laugh long and gayly.

Walter Price, M.D., resident physician at Emergency Hospital, told of being called to the side of the dying woman, of carrying her to the hospital in the ambulance, and of the wounds discovered and the hopelessness of surgery to save her life, and of her death within twenty-five minutes after reaching the hospital. Charles S. White, deputy coroner, recited the results of the autopsy, and ascribed death to a bullet that had penetrated the brain. There were two other wounds, one through the eye and another in the shoulder.

A.H. Weber and Gordon R. Cowrie, who have offices in the Colorado building, added details of what happened after the shots were fired, when they rushed from their offices to find a tragedy committed.

The witnesses were not questioned by the attorneys for the accused man, Robert L. Montague and Herbert Robinson.

Prisoner Spends Restless Night

MacDonald spent a restless night in a cell at the first precinct police station. He paced the cell floor most of the night, stopping occasionally to rest a few minutes on the iron bench.

Seated in front of his cell during the entire time he was its sole occupant was a policeman in uniform. His presence there was much on the order of the death watch placed over condemned men in jail. The policeman was kept there, it is said, for fear MacDonald would make an attempt to end his life.

This morning the prisoner appeared repentant, although he expressed by word no remorse for his act of yesterday. He had fully recovered from the effects of the strong drink in which he had indulged, however. He would make no statement in addition to what he had told Detective Evans and Precinct Detective Messer at the first precinct station yesterday afternoon.

When taken to police headquarters this morning to be measured and photographed he found himself in a room with other offenders. He displayed considerable interest in the work of the Bertillion operator and photographer.

"I have nothing to say," he replied to Inspector Boardman when asked if he desired to make a statement.

After being measured and photographed MacDonald was returned to the first precinct station and held until he was taken to the morgue to be present at the inquest.

From the prisoner relatives of his wife and other sources the police learned something of MacDonald's past. He is a native of New York, they learned, and his father is manager of a hotel at Rensselaer, N.Y. His brothers, George MacDonald, jr.; Walter and William MacDonald, are said to be in the hotel business in New York state.

Had Served in the Army

MacDonald enlisted in the Hospital Corps of the United States Army and served on Governors Island, N.Y, afterward coming to this city and serving at the Washington barracks. Detective Messer served with him as a member of the Hospital Corps. Messer recognized MacDonald when he saw him at the police station yesterday.
Nearly six years ago MacDonald was discharged from the service at Fort Myer, Va. It was about that time he met Miss Gertrude Shaw. Their marriage took place shortly afterward.

Rumor had it yesterday that Mrs. MacDonald had refused to go to Sag Harbor, N.Y., with her husband, and that refusal brought about the fatality. The statement of the prisoner does not connect such an incident with the shooting.

"I was on the job," he stated to Detective Charles A. Evans and Precinct Detective Messer, leading them to believe that he had found his wife in the Colorado building under conditions which he did not approve.

"But" said Detective Evans, "a subsequent explanation of her presence there makes it appear that he lured her there for the purpose of killing her. Why he should have taken such public place I cannot understand."

It developed that MacDonald induced his wife to meet him in the building by telling her he had to get her signature for $20 he said he was to receive from his mother's estate, one-half of which, he had told her, he was going to give her. Such information, it is stated, was also conveyed to the woman before she returned here from New York, the correspondence between husband and wife having been carried on through a sister.

Not Known to Lawyer

Mention was made by MacDonald of the law firm of McNeill & McNeill, ninth floor of the Colorado building. At the office of the firm it was said nothing was known of MacDonald. The police are satisfied that the prisoner invented the story solely for the purpose of getting his wife where he could kill her.

The police are unable to understand why MacDonald should have inveigled her into meeting him at the Colorado building, and why it was deemed necessary for Mrs. M.A. Billop, her sister, to accompany her.

Since her return from New York four days ago, after a separation of several months, husband and wife were in the Billop home at 928 I street. Tuesday night they were in a summer garden together. Yesterday they were at the I street house, not much more than thirty minutes before the shooting occurred.

Mrs. MacDonald and Mrs. Billop went from the home to the Colorado building together. Mrs. MacDonald had made an engagement to meet her husband at the building at 1:30 o'clock.

"I used to be afraid of Ed," Mrs. MacDonald said to her sister, while on the way to the building. "I don't feel the least bit afraid of him today."

MacDonald was waiting on the first floor of the building when his wife and sister-in-law reached there. Husband and wife entered the elevator. As it started to ascend, Mrs. MacDonald waived to her sister and smiled. It was but a few minutes before the fatal shot was fired.

The remark of Mrs. MacDonald: "Oh, I guess not." made just before the shots were fired, it is thought, indicated that the husband threatened to kill his wife, and she tried to show she did not fear him.

When MacDonald made the statement: "I was on the job," he was asked for an explanation.

"Why did you do it?" Detective Evans asked him.

Claims He Was Justified

"I won't make a statement today," was his response. "When I do -- I was justified in what I did, and I'll show up some people here.

"No one knows what I have gone through with her during the past five years," added MacDonald. "My life was ruined five years ago when I married her."

"Was your wife in the building to meet anybody?" the prisoner was asked.

"Never mind now," he replied. "I was right on the job."

MacDonald made no direct admission that he had fired the three shots. He told other things, however, to make it certain that there was no doubt as to who fired them.

The prisoner admitted ownership of the revolver, saying he purchased it in Baltimore about two years ago. He said he had had it in pawn since then, having redeemed it recently.
When MacDonald and Precinct Detective Messer met and recalled having served together, the man behind the bars said: "I've got myself in a whole lot of trouble," adding that he was justified in doing what he did.

Assistant United States Charles H. Turner visited he first precinct police station yesterday afternoon and discussed the shooting with the police. He directed the detectives to advise MacDonald that what he said would be used against him. The detectives so advised him, and he said he fully understood his rights.

During the time MacDonald has resided in this city he has had employment in the office of the Blue Line
Transfer Company, in the Potomac yards of the Southern Railway Company, and as bartender in saloons.
His last saloon employment was at Martin McDonald's, 12th and D streets northwest, where he worked during the Christmas holidays.

The prisoner's only callers at the police station last night, it is stated, were a saloonkeeper and bartender.

Tribute to Dead Friend

Resolutions by Pension Office Clerks in Memory of W.P. MacGreal

The clerks in the pension bureau recently adopted a series of resolutions, in tribute to the memory of W. MacGreal, a fellow-employee, who died recently. It was stated that as he was in the prime of life and always looking the picture of health, Mr. MacGreal's demise came as a shock to his wide circle of friends.

Mr. MacGreal was a resident of Chicago, Ill., and came into the bureau when Gen. Black became commissioner of pensions. Upon the retirement of Gen. Black from the commissionership he remained in the office and was known as an efficient and conscientious clerk. He held different positions of responsibility and filled them satisfactorily, not only to his superiors but to those under his control.

The resolutions recited that Mr. MacGreal was the embodiment of courtesy and his careful consideration of the feelings of others was a marked characteristic, and every acquaintance remembers his as a perfect gentleman. His funeral occurred from his late residence, 1612 19th street, the services being conducted by Rev. Alexander Kent, who spoke briefly but eloquently on the "Hope of Immortality." General Black then delivered a touching tribute to the life and character of the deceased.

The body was placed in the vault of the Congressional cemetery, pending the selection of a permanent burial site. The floral tributes were beautiful, especially the one sent by his friends in the pension bureau. The pall-bearers were J.S. Garrison, John W. Watson, Rudolph Johnson, E.C. Palmer, John Carroll and W.F. Clark.

Fatal Injuries

Howard Mack, Twelve Years Old, Killed by a Fall

Howard Mack, twelve years old, whose parents live at 317 L street southeast, was taken to the Emergency Hospital this afternoon from the wholesale house of Golden, Love & Co., 928 Louisiana avenue, suffering from a fatal injury to his head, which he received by falling down the elevator shaft. He died about an hour later. The boy was employed in the box factory in the establishment and was playing about the elevator shaft during the lunch hour, when he accidentally fell headlong down the shaft. He was unconscious when picked up. There was no delay in reaching the hospital, as the people in the establishment did not wait to summon an ambulance, but sent him to the Emergency Hospital in a wagon.

Caused by Accident

Coroner's Certificate Regarding the Death of Howard Mack

Coroner Nevitt investigated the death of Howard Mack, the twelve-year-old boy who fell down the elevator shaft at the establishment of Golden, Love & Co., 928 Louisiana avenue, yesterday afternoon, the particulars having been published in The Star, and gave a certificate of accidental death. The boy and other companions employed in the building were engaged at playing about the building during the lunch hour when the accident occurred. Young Mack was making an effort to descend a ladder when he accidentally lost his hold and fell from the third story to the bottom of the shaft.

Undertaker Mitchell removed the body from the hospital to the home of the boy's mother, Mrs. Cecelia Mack, 317 L street southeast, and his funeral will take place Wednesday.

Inventor of Paint Formula Expires
Charles Macnichol's Preparation Used on Capitol and Other Buildings

Charles Macnichol, 79, inventor of the special paint formula used on the Capitol, died Saturday at his home, 19th Fifth street northeast. Funeral services were to be held today at 3:30 p.m. at Lee's undertaking establishment with burial in Congressional Cemetery.

The paint, which he discovered in collaboration with Harry Gardiner, Washington scientist, is applied every four years to the exterior and interior of the building, and it will continue to be used, the Capitol architect's office said.

During his contracting days one of Mr. Macnichol's most difficult accomplishments was the painting of the interior and ceiling of the Capitol rotunda. He also painted Statuary Hall, the White House, Treasury, State, War and Navy Building and the Interior Department, using his special paint.

Mr. Macnichol was a member of the National Lodge of Masons and a former president of the Master Painters' Association. He was born in Philadelphia in 1854. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Ada Macnichol, and a son, Walter M. Macnichol.

He was well known among rod and reel men of this section. He was known as one of the best anglers in the District, and took a keen interest at all times in fishing, particularly in bass fishing at which he was considered a master.

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery

Last Updated: 2/12/2015
Major General Alexander Macomb was born at Detroit, April 3, 1782. The city of Detroit, at that time, was a garrison town, and among the first images that struck his eyes were those of the circumstances of war. These early impressions often fix the character of the man.

In 1798, while Macomb was quite a youth, he was elected into a select company, which was called, "The New York Rangers." The name was taken from that Spartan band of rangers selected from the provincials who, from 1755 to 1763, were the elite of every British commander on Lake George and the borders of Canada. At the time he entered the corps of New York Rangers, Congress had passed a law receiving volunteers for the defense of the country, as invasion by a French army was soon expected. This patriotic band volunteered their services to Government, which were accepted, but he soon left this corps, and obtained a cornetcy at the close of the year 1798, and was commissioned in January, 1799. General North, then adjutant general of the Northern army, soon saw the merits of the youthful soldier, and took him into his staff, as deputy adjutant general. Under such a master as the intelligent and accomplished North, Macomb made great progress in his profession, and in the affections of his brother officers of the army. The young officer that Hamilton noticed and North instructed, would not fail to be ambitious of distinction. He visited Montreal in order to observe the discipline and tactics of the veteran corps kept at that important military post, and did not neglect his opportunities.

The thick and dark cloud that hung over the country passed away--a great part of the troops were disbanded, and a set of the officers and men returned to private life; a few only retained; among them was Macomb, who was commissioned as a second lieutenant of dragoons, and sent forthwith on the recruiting service, but it was not then necessary to push the business; and as he was stationed in Philadelphia, he had fine opportunities to associate with the best informed men of the city, and found easy access to the Franklin and other extensive libraries, of which advantages he did not fail to improve.

When his body of recruits was formed, he marched with it to the Western frontiers to join Gen. Wilkinson, an officer who had been left in service from the Revolutionary war. In the company of Wilkinson, and of Col. Williams, the engineer, he must have gathered a mass of materials for future use. With him he went into the Cherokee country to aid in making a treaty with that nation. He was on this mission nearly a year, and kept a journal of every thing he saw or heard. This was good school for one whose duty it might hereafter be to fight these very aborigines, and, in fact, these lessons of the wilderness are not lost on any one of mind and observation. The corps to which he belonged was disbanded, and a corps of engineers formed; to this he was attached as first lieutenant. He was now sent to West Point, where he was, by the code there established, a pupil as well as an officer. Being examined and declared competent, he was appointed an adjutant of the corps at that post, and discharged his duty with so much spirit and intelligence, that when the first court martial, after his examination, was convened, he was appointed judge advocate. This court was ordered for the trial of a distinguished officer for disobeying an arbitrary order for cutting off the hair. Peter the Great could not carry such an order into execution, but our Republican country did; and the veteran Col. Butler was reprimanded for not throwing his white locks to the wind when ordered to do so by his superior. The talents and arguments exhibited by Macomb, as judge advocate on this court martial, brought him into very great notice as a man of exalted intellect as well as a fine soldier. He was now called upon to compile a treatise upon martial law and the practice of courts martial, which, in a future day of leisure, he effected, and his book is now the standard work upon courts martial for the Army of the United States. In 1805 Macomb was promoted to the rank of captain in the corps of engineers, and sent to the sea-board to superintend the fortifications which had been ordered by an act of Congress. By this service he became known to the first men in the country, and his merits were duly appreciated from New Hampshire to the Floridas.

In 1808 he was promoted to the rank of major, and acted as superintendent of fortifications until just before the war, when he was advanced to a lieutenant colonelcy. He was again detailed to act as judge advocate on a court martial for the trial of Gen. Wilkinson, who had called the court on C.J. Butler. He added to his reputation in this case. Wilkinson was his friend, but Macomb discharged his duty with military exactness.

At the breaking out of the war of 1812, he left the seat of Government, where he had discharged an arduous duty, in assisting to give form and regularity to the army then just raised by order of Congress. All sorts of confusion had prevailed, from the want of a uniform system of military tactics: he was fortunate in his exertions. When there was honorable war, he could not be satisfied to remain, as it were, a cabinet officer, and wear a sword only to advise what should be done, which seemed to be the regulations of the Army in respect to engineers; he therefore solicited a command in the corps of artillery that was to be raised, and was gratified by a commission as colonel of the third regiment, dated July 6, 1812. The regiment was to consist of twenty companies of one hundred and eighteen each. It was, in fact, the command of a division, except in rank. His reputation assisted in raising the body of men, and in November of that year he marched to the frontiers with his command. Macomb and his troops spent the winter at Sackett's Harbor. He contemplated an attack upon Kingston, but was defeated in his plan by the fears of some and the jealousies of others; but he soon distinguished himself at Niagara and Fort George; at the same time Commodore Chauncey was endeavoring to bring the enemy's fleet to battle on Lake Ontario. The next service performed by Col. Macomb was under Gen. Wilkinson, and if the campaign was not successful, Macomb was not chargeable with any portion of the failure.

\[The Funeral of General Macomb\]
Which is to take place from his late residence today, at 10 o'clock, will be an interesting spectacle as well as an honorable tribute to the station, the services, and the personal character of the late Commander of the Army. The Orders from the Departments, directing Funeral Honors to the deceased, will be found in our columns today. The Company of U.S. Light Infantry on duty at Fort McHenry arrived here yesterday for the purpose of attending the Funeral.

It is probable, we understand, that a number of Volunteer Military Companies also will arrive in this city from Baltimore this morning for the same purpose.

Little did we expect, when we attended the Funeral of Gen. Harrison, on which occasion Gen. Macomb commanded the Military escort, that we should so soon have to follow the remains of the living General to the tomb.

\[The National Intelligencer, Tuesday, June 29, 1841\]
The Funeral of General Macomb, Commander of the Army took place yesterday, agreeably in the order of arrangements officially announced, and was attended by the President, and all the Officers of the Government, both Houses of Congress, the Diplomatic Corps, Military and Naval Officers, etc. The solemn military and civic array which filled the broad avenue through the city presented an imposing spectacle, in keeping with, and appropriately closed by, the impressive ceremonies at the tomb.

Distinguished Career

The erection of a monument commemorative of the service of Major General Alexander Macomb at Detroit, Mich., his birthplace, sixty years after his death in this city, when in command of the United States army, is a matter of interest not only in military circles, but to many of the older families of the District, as well as many of his relatives resident among us. The latter third of his three score years of life was passed in this city, and such was his intercourse with the people that, upon the announcement of his death here June 25, 1841, the press spoke of him as "the brave soldier of forty years, the useful citizen, the philanthropist and poor man's friend." His remains were followed to the grave by thousands of people--the funeral being one of the largest and most imposing, being attended by the President, cabinet, diplomatic corps, both houses of Congress, the corporate authorities of the three District cities--Alexandria not having been retroceded--and many civic associations. The military escort was composed of Major Ringgold's light battery of artillery, from Fort McHenry; a battalion of marines, under Major Tyler; the Washington Light Infantry, National Blues, Mechanical Riflemen, the Georgetown Grays and other volunteer companies of the District. The Baltimore military organizations were deterred from paying tribute to General Macomb, as they were the same day escorting the remains of General Harrison through Baltimore.

A handsome marble monument was erected over the remains of General Macomb in the family lot in which are also the remains of some of his family. There survive him quite a number of descendants to the third and fourth generations, a number of them residents of the District.

The services of General Macomb to the country were of inestimable value, but the crowning glory of career was his success in defending Plattsburg and defeating a British force six times as large as his own, saving the upper part of the state of New York to the country. The design for the Detroit monument represents him at this battle standing on the ramparts of one of his forts, field glass in hand. While the place of his birth, the town of Plattsburg, where he obtained a phenomenal victory, and West Point Academy, where he organized the corps of cadets, are all suitable places for a monument to commemorate his services, it would appear that besides the modest family monument over his remains at the Congressional cemetery, there should be one erected in one of Washington's parks. Indeed outside of army circles, he having served from 1821 as chief of the engineer corps, and from 1828 to his death, in 1841, as commanding general, there are hundreds of older Washingtonians in every walk of life who can recite pleasant reminiscences of the general. These would warmly appreciate the placing of a statue in his memory at some point in the nation's capital city.

Of Irish and French Descent

Descended from Irish-French stock and born in Detroit in 1782, when that place was a trading station, and being sent to school at Newark, N.J., he there showed his proclivity for a military life. When sixteen years old he joined the New York Rangers, and volunteered his services to the government. He soon after became a cornet of light dragoons, and next as assistant under Adjutant General North.

When the war scare was over, in 1799, he went to Canada, but soon returned, and became a second lieutenant of dragoons. He saw service as such on the Ohio, and with a commission, making treaties with the Indians. He was then but a boy. When the army was reduced the dragoons were disbanded and an engineer corps, with one major, two captains, four lieutenants, and ten cadets were provided for. These, with artillery, were located at West Point and formed the nucleus of the Military Academy.

Young Macomb was retained in the service as a lieutenant of infantry, and applied for and obtained a transfer to the engineers in 1802. Taking the course with the lieutenants and cadets, he was the first to graduate. He was made adjutant of the post, and as such organized the corps of cadets and became the head of the academy, being promoted to the rank of lieutenant colonel in 1811. In the following year, while performing the duties at the head of the academy, which had become a separate post, the duties of chief of engineers, the head being old and infirm, he also filled the position of adjutant general of the army.

The formation of two new regiments of artillery being authorized by Congress on the eve of the war of 1812, Macomb asked for and was given the colonelcy of one of them. This was the regiment, recruited in the neighborhood of New York, and he marched with it to the defense of the northern frontier. The British designed to capture and occupy the upper portion of New York state, and a naval force, under Capt. Downie, was sent against McDonough's fleet, while from Canada Sir George Prevost came down on the Americans, with 16,000 well-disciplined troops, to exterminate or capture Macomb and the few thousands with him. The larger portion of the invaders were veterans who had served under Wellington, and Macomb had but few regulars which, with militia and volunteers, aggregated less than 3,000 men.

Macomb prepared for the attack by building forts to defend the town, and it is related that Gen. J.G. Totten, then a major and afterward the head of the engineer bureau and resident of Washington, was in charge of the work as the engineer officer. The attack came and the foe was vanquished on land and water. Macomb, with a loss of less than a hundred, defeated Sir George, inflicting a loss in killed, wounded and prisoners of 2,500. McDonough sunk the British fleet. In an old song 'tis said:
"Sir George Prevost, with all his host,
Marched forth from Montreal, sir.
Both he and they as blythe and gay
As going to a ball, sir."

After describing the battle and the astonishment of Sir George, the song ends:
"The rout began, Sir George led on,
His men ran helter skelter;
Each tried his best to outrun the rest
To gain a place of shelter.
To hide their fear they gave a cheer
And thought it mighty cunning--
He'll fight, say they, another day
Who save himself by running."

Electrifying Victories
These victories electrified the nation, the news reaching Washington shortly after the defeat of the British at Baltimore September 12. General Macomb received the thanks of the legislatures of several states, the freedom of New York city tendered in a gold box, a gold medal and sword from Congress and the brevet of major general.

At the close of the War of 1812, in March, 1815, the army was reduced to a peace footing, with two major generals and four brigadier generals, and Macomb was retained in the latter rank in charge of the fifth military division, with headquarters at Detroit. Under his administration of military affairs much was done in opening up the country, and he had so won the affections of the people that when, with his family, he left Detroit for Washington in 1821 the people crowded the wharves to bid him good-bye.

Having been appointed to the head of the engineer corps, he arrived at the capital in June, 1821, and took up his residence in Georgetown, his family consisting of his wife and nine children. Ere a year had passed, and before Mrs. Macomb became acquainted with the capital, the general was left a widower. Five years afterward, in May, 1826, he married Miss Harriet B. Wilson, the daughter of a Presbyterian minister of Georgetown, and subsequently the family moved to the fine old brick residence at the northwest corner of 17th and I streets, erected about 1826 by Mr. William Williamson, who was long the navy agent here. This became the scene of many brilliant society functions, General and Mrs. Macomb and the grown children being most genial as hosts; and though the parties were often magnificent, with a military air about them, the plain citizen was made to feel at home. In compliance with the teachings of her youth, Mrs. Macomb drew the line on dancing. Though filling the requirements of their station in society, the members of the family found time and inclination for a work by which they won the respect of the community in relieving the poor and needy, and the alleviation of suffering in an unostentatious manner.

The general was the author of a number of military works and possessed some literary ambition. A drama of frontier life from his pen found its way to the stage, and met with some success. One of the adjuncts to his home, purchased in 1831, was a fine garden extending to K street. A fine tenpin alley near the house was an attraction for many of his friends, military and civilian.

In 1828, on the death of Major General Jacob Brown, the command of the army was given to General Macomb, and he retained the position until his death. General Macomb was a prominent figure at the inauguration of General Harrison, and so youthful looking was he that the populace could not believe that he was a hero of the war of 1812, much less the commanding general of the army. A month afterward he commanded the escort at the funeral of President Harrison, whose remains were placed in the tomb at Congressional cemetery.

Less than three months afterward the body of the general was borne over the same route to the same cemetery, just after the remains of General Harrison had been forwarded to Cincinnati. The same minister, Rev. Dr. Hawley of St. John's Church officiated, and the same battery, Ringgold's, fired the salute. Many of the same troops and organizations participated, and, as stated before, almost the entire population of the District paid a tribute to him, thousands following the remains to the cemetery.

There survived the general two sons and five daughters, and the family is yet represented in the army.

The Evening Star, November 8, 1893
A Veteran Fireman Gone
Death of John F. Maddox, for Many Years Foreman of No. 2
John F. Maddox, who was foreman of No. 2 engine company until the 1st instant, died yesterday at Providence Hospital. He was one of the best-known firemen in the United States. He had seen more active fire duty than probably any man in the District of Columbia fire department. He was born in this city, June 17, 1837, and entered the old volunteer department when a boy, running with the Anacostia company. Subsequently, young Maddox resigned and learned the trade of wheelwright with Andrew J. Joyce. He was a member of company "A," Washington Light Infantry, and served with that company under the command of Capt. Lem. Williams in the three months' service. On the formation of the paid fire department in July, 1864, he was made private in engine company No. 2. In three months after his appointment he was made foreman of his company, which position he filled with credit until 1868, when he left the department, returning December 9, 1876, when he was reappointed in his old company. In 1882 he was promoted to foreman, and in 1886 was made acting assistant chief. He did not like his new position, and in 1887 resigned and went back to his old company as foreman. Foreman Maddox came near losing his life in 1886 at a fire on Capitol Hill, where he was painfully cut on the face and hands by the explosion of a quantity of gasoline. No member of the fire department was loved and respected more than John F. Maddox, and his death is mourned by the entire department. His funeral will take place from his brother's residence, 915 G street southeast, Thursday, November 9 at 2 o'clock p.m. The following members of the fire department who are also members of the fire department who are also members of the Elks, will act as pallbearers; Joseph Parris, chief; William T. Belt, assistant chief; W.T. Shedd, James Moriarty, Thoams Martin, engineers, and James Ragan of the volunteer organization. The Elks and Veteran Firemen will attend the funeral.

The Evening Star, October 23, 1893
John Maddox Retired
After a service of twenty-eight years in the fire department John F. Maddox of Engine Company No. 2 was today placed upon the retired list at his own request. Foreman Maddox is one of the best known men in the fire department and is a brave and courageous fireman. He entered the service as a volunteer in 1857 and served for seven years until the organization of the paid fire department, when he became a member of that organization. Chief Parris in his letter to the Commissioners today recommended that owing to the poor health, the result of long and faithful service and close attention to duty in the department, that he placed on the retired list to take effect November 1, 1893 at a compensation of $40 per month. Chief Parris was visibly affected when the Commissioners approved this order and said it was the greatest blow the department had yet suffered.

_The National Intelligencer, Saturday, July 14, 1849_

It is with saddened hearts that we announce to our readers the decease of Mrs. Madison, Widow of James Madison, Ex-President of the United States. She died at her residence in this city on Thursday night last, the 12th instant, between 10 and 11 o'clock, aged about eighty-two years.

Beloved by all who personally knew her, and universally respected, this venerable Lady closed her long and well-spent life with the calm resignation which goodness of heart combined with piety only can impart. It would seem an abuse of terms to say that we regret the departure of one so ripe and so fitted for a better world. But, in the case of this excellent Lady, she continued until within a few weeks to grace society with her presence, and lend to it those charms with which she adorned the circles of the highest, the wisest, and best, during the bright career of her illustrious husband. Wherever she appeared, every one became conscious of the presence of the spirit of benignity and gentleness, united to all the attributes of feminine loveliness. For ourselves, whose privilege it was to know and admire her through the last forty years of this life, it would not be easy to speak in terms of exaggeration of the virtues and winning manners of this eminent Lady. To attempt it would add no brightness to her fair name, and would be little needed to move the public sympathy. All of our own country and thousands in other lands will need no language of Eulogy to inspire a deep and sincere regret when they learn the demise of one who touched all hearts by her goodness and won the admiration of all by the charms of dignity and grace.

_Will of Dolly P. Madison, widow of the late James Madison, of Va._ (dted. July 9, 1849, probated March 25, 1850/May 21, 1850)

To son John Payne Todd, $10,000, being ½ of sum appropriated by U.S. Congress for purchase of my husband’s papers, which sum stands invested in the names of James Buchanan, John Y. Mason and Richard Smith as trustees.

To adopted daughter Annie Payne, $10,000, remaining half of above sum.

If son survives daughter, upon her death sum devised to her paid to him; if she survives him, the sum devised to her to be held by trustees for her.

Wits.: Sally B.L. Thomas; Elizabeth Lee; J. Madison Cutts

On March 25, 1850, court proceedings to the authenticity of will; John Payne Todd, caveator, against James H. Causten, Jr. and Annie his wife (late Annie Payne); court upheld document as legal will.

_Historic Houses of Georgetown and Washington City, p.284_

Mrs. Madison died quietly in her sleep on Thursday, July 12, 1849. The following Monday afternoon the burial service at St. John's drew an immense concourse of people. Escorting the body as it left the church, the cortege—the largest hitherto seen in the city. ... The long procession moved over Capitol Hill to the Congressional Cemetery where Mrs. Madison's body was placed in the receiving vault until such time as it should be taken to Montpellier for burial.

A Shocking Sight
Witnessed by Many People

A shocking sight was witnessed this afternoon by many persons living on Maryland avenue, between 9th and 13th streets. The mangled body of Willie McGill, a boy, was dragged for some distance by a freight train in full view of many people. The unfortunate youth who lived at No. 1013 Maryland avenue, attended school in the Bradley building. At noon today, when the children were dismissed for recess, Willie started home to dinner. He cut through a lot between 12th and 13th streets and attempted to jump on the freight train and then jumped off in front of his house. He missed his footing or slipped in some way and fell head foremost to the ground. His clothing caught in the wheels and he was dragged along Maryland avenue, beside the train past his mother's house, until the train stopped east of 9th street. A number of ladies who saw the sight screamed, and one man was so overcome that he made a rush for the train which was in motion to save the boy. When the train stopped the body was removed to the Baltimore and Potomac freight depot, where Dr. Boarman, the railroad company's physician, sewed up some of the terrible cuts made by the wheels.
boy's neck was broken, and one side of his face was completely torn off and the back of his head was badly mashed. His abdomen was cut open in several laces. The clothing was torn almost complete from his body. His body was later removed to an undertaking establishment.

R.B. Mahany, 73, Statesman, Dies

Was Journalist and Diplomat--Served as Minister to Ecuador

Death dwindled the ranks of Washington's "gentlemen of the old school" yesterday when Rowland Blennerhassett Mahany, 73, journalist, statesman and diplomat, died at his home, 1414 Madison street.

Courtly of manner and always elegantly attired, Mr. Mahany was one of the Capital's bon vivants when he came here as a member of Congress from Buffalo in 1895 and in later years charmed his wide circle of friends with stories of the past.

Although he had been in failing health for several weeks, Mr. Mahany left his sick bed two weeks ago to visit the National Press Club and reminisce with 80-year-old Charley Hamilton, dean of the newspaper corps here, and other members of the Old Timers' Club.

Poet of Distinction

A poet of distinction, Mr. Mahany was a crony of "Marse Henry" Watterson, Alfred Henry Lewis and others of Washington's brilliant corps of journalists along old "newspaper row."

Mr. Mahany was born in Buffalo, September 28, 1864, and was educated at Hobart, Union and Harvard. He was elected first marshal of the Phi Beta Kappa Chapter at Harvard, but resigned in favor of William A. Leahy.

In 1888, immediately after his graduation, Mr. Mahany became associate editor of the Buffalo Express. In addition to his newspaper duties he was an instructor in history and literature in the Buffalo High School.

Mr. Mahany went to Ecuador in 1890 as secretary of the American Legation, a post he held for two years, when he was appointed Minister by President Benjamin Harrison. The Santos treaty was consummated while he was in office. He served in Congress from 1895 to 1899, when he became harbor commissioner of Buffalo. He became general counsel to the Polish Patriotic Congress in 1903.

Returned to Newspaper Work

Returning to newspaper work in 1910, Mr. Mahany became editor of the Buffalo Enquirer. From 1914 to 1918 was United States commissioner of conciliation. In the following year he was an assistant to the Secretary of Labor and foreign trade relations commissioner of the State Department.

President Wilson appointed Mr. Mahany as one of the 10 Federal umpires of the National War Labor Board in 1919. He was also made a director of the United States Housing Corp.

As solicitor of the Department of Labor, Mr. Mahany served as Acting Secretary in 1920 and in 1921 he was the American representative at the meeting of the International Commission on Immigration and Emigration at Geneva.

Upon his return from Geneva Mr. Mahany opened a law office here. He was counsel for the Japanese government in important war claims cases. In 1924 and 1828 Mr. Mahany was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

One of the founders of the Congressional Club, Mr. Mahany also was a member of the Metropolitan and the National Press Clubs. He was an honorary member of the South Carolina Society and a member of the Columbia Historical Society.

In 1909 Mr. Mahany published "Tuscany and Other Poems." In recent years he had confined his public writing largely to "Letters to the Editor," which were outstanding because of their beautiful composition.

He is survived by his sister, Miss Mary E. Mahany of New Jersey.

Where the roses ne'er shall wither,

We shall meet where no winter storm can roll,
Driving summer from the soul:
Where all hearts are turned to love,
On that happy shore above,
Where the hills are ever vernal,
And the springs of youth eternal,
We shall meet where life's morning dream returns,
And the noonday never burns;

On that happy shore above

Anti-Saloon League's Founding Sometimes Is Credited to Him

John R. Mahoney, 94, the District's "grand old man" of temperance, died early today in Sibley Hospital after an illness of six weeks.

Mr. Mahoney, who was one of the Capital's oldest inhabitants, became a temperance advocate early in life. He is sometimes credited with having been responsible for the founding of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

He was ruler of the Grand Tent of the District of Columbia Rechabites for two years and for many years was high tent secretary for the Nation. A vice president of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, he served as the group's financial secretary 36 years.

Mr. Mahoney was born in Indian Territory, now Oklahoma, and came to Washington when about 12 years old. In the 1860's he was a policeman, but was best known professionally as a paper hanger. For a great many years he operated his own paper-hanging business in the 300 block of Pennsylvania avenue S.E. Some five years ago he sold the business and retired.
One Concession to Intemperance

Of remarkable vitality, Mr. Mahoney retained all of his faculties except his hearing, which was slightly impaired, until his death. He often declared he would live to be 100, and when his health began to fail shortly before his death and he was forced to use a cane, he apologized for it to several of his friends.

His one concession to intemperance, he often said, was the use of tobacco. He smoked large, black cigars which, he once told a friend, "would be the death of him."

During the early 1890s the liquor situation in Washington was something of a disgrace, what with improper control of sale and distribution. Mr. Mahoney was one of a group of persons who determined to do something about this. They formed the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia in 1893.

Failed in "Expose."

Having laid the groundwork for a campaign against intemperance, the league next determined on a course of action. Many of the establishments selling liquor, they found, were on property owned by outstanding District citizens. This and other data in the nature of an expose they gathered and asked local newspapers to publish. They were refused.

Undaunted, they pooled their resources and published a paper called No Compromise, which waged a war against intemperance. Then in 1895, the group decided to extend its sphere of influence and called a convention of all organizations interested in temperance. The meeting was held in Mr. Mahoney's home. Shortly afterward the Anti-Saloon League of America came into being. Mr. Mahoney became a figure in the Nation as well as the Capital.

Voted Twice in His Life

Mr. Mahoney had civic pride. Washington, when he was a boy, was a town with one Federal building -- the White House -- and with a population of less than 36,000. He watched with approval the city's growth, taking pleasure in the new Government buildings and the swelling census figures.

He was over 90 when he voted for the second time. He first cast a ballot in 1868 for a Washington mayoral candidate. The second time he went to the polls was in 1938, during the District suffrage referendum. He favored both national representation and local suffrage.

During his later years he liked to think of temperance as a going concern. To his home frequently came men who had come within his sphere of influence in early life. They told him they thought they were better and more successful men because of the things he had drummed into them years before. These incidents he felt to be something of a justification of his efforts.

On the occasion of his birthday three years ago he was given a party by the Association of Oldest Inhabitants at Old Union Engine House.

Doubt as to His Age

There was some doubt as to Mr. Mahoney's exact age. His birth date, recorded in the family Bible, was given as January 10, but the year was confusing. It was written either 1846 or 1847, the last figure being double, with either the 6 superimposed over the 7 or vice versa.

Felicitations at the birth celebration included a telegram from President Roosevelt.

Mr. Mahoney was an advocate of prohibition from the time the Prohibition party was organized in 1869. He was a member of the International Order of Good Templars, once serving as chief templar.

He was twice married. His first wife, Marion Parker Mahoney, died many years ago. The second Mrs. Mahoney, the former Sadie Hissey, died three years ago.

Among those surviving Mr. Mahoney are a daughter, Mrs. Emily R. Pollock of Washington; a granddaughter, Mrs. Edith Grailey of Baltimore; two grandsons, Robert E. and Charles W. Mahoney; a niece, Mrs. Bertha Davis, and a nephew, William Mahoney, all of this city.

Funeral Services For John R. Mahoney Set for Tomorrow

Rechabites Will Hold Rites for Temperance Leader Tonight

Funeral services for John R. Mahoney, 94, prominent national and District temperance leader, who died yesterday in Sibley Hospital, will be held at 2 p.m. tomorrow in the Ryan funeral home, 317 Pennsylvania avenue S.E. Burial will be in Congressional Cemetery.
Earlier rites will be held a 8 o'clock tonight in the funeral home by Eagle Tent of the Order of Rechabites, with friends and other organizations of which Mr. Mahoney was a member invited to attend. Mrs. Susie Clarkson, chief ruler of the tent, will be among those officiating.

Honored by Organization

At a meeting last night in the organization hall, 7 Fourth street N.E., Mr. Mahoney's memory was honored by national officers, including High Chief Ruler E.H. Hamilton, High Treasurer William J. Miller and High Chaplain Porter C. Fox.

When 12 years of age Mr. Mahoney came to the District from the Oklahoma Indian Territory. For many years he was in business here, retiring about five years ago from operation of a paper-hanging business in the 300 block of Pennsylvania avenue S.E.

Active in Anti-Saloon Group

In 1893 he and fellow citizens formed the Anti-Saloon League of the District of Columbia, and he is credited with a part in the later establishment of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

His character and career were lauded last night at a meeting of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants, of which he had been financial secretary for 33 years. A committee was named to attend the funeral, including John Clagett Proctor, Christian Heurich, Charles A. Langley, Fred A. Emery, Joseph I. Keefer, John B. Dickman, Elra C. Palmer, Jesse C. Suter, L.E. Brueninger, Walter E. Allen, Anthony Denekas, Dr. Hugh M. Smith, James F. Duhamel, Harry A. Burr and Harry Gladman.

Makepeace, Mrs. Stella A.
d. 11 Apr 1846
21 yrs.

[Our Sister ... who passed to the spirit world April 11, 1846, aged 21 years.]

On the 11th inst. Miss Stella Adeline Makepeace. Her funeral will take place from the residence of Henry Stone, Esq. on Capitol Hill this (Mon.) afternoon at half past 4 o'clock.

Diary of John Silva Meehan
(at Library of Congress, Manuscript Division)
March 21, 1846:
Mrs. Fanny Ball called to see us this afternoon and stated that Miss Makepeace, who is very sick and staying at Mrs. Stone's seems better today than she had been at any time since she first came to their house. Still they consider her situation very critical. Her body is so wasted that she is almost a skeleton; yet today her strength is much improved and her spirit is considerably animated.

March 22, 1846:
We learned this evening from Mrs. Stone that Miss Makepeace is much better, and that the medicine given to her by Dr. Piper, a homeopathic physician has had the happiest effect. It would be one of the most remarkable cures of the age if she is again restored to health.

April 1, 1846:
In the evening, Ma and Anna were over at Mrs. Stone's and learned that Miss Makepeace was so much improved that she walked nearly across her bedchamber and that her symptoms are more favorable. It will be very strange if she recovers so as to go home to New England.

April 11, 1846:
Poor Miss Makepeace, of whose recovery we had entertained strong hopes, died this morning a little while before day. Unfavorable symptoms made their appearance last night and her immediate friends were called in. Dr. Piper was in attendance and remained with her some time after 2 o'clock. She sunk gently into the arms of death, without a struggle or a pang.

April 13, 1846:
The funeral of Miss Stella Adeline Makepeace occurred this afternoon about half past 4 o'clock. Services agreeable to the form of the New Jerusalem Church were read by the Rev. Mr. Barret of New York and the body was then borne in a hearse attended by 5 or 6 carriages to the Congressional burying ground and there interred.

Miss Mallon, Writer and Retired Member of Times Bureau

Miss Winifred Mallon, 74, one of the best known newspaper women here for almost half a century, died yesterday at her home, 2311 Connecticut avenue n.w., of a heart ailment.

She retired in 1949, after 20 years at the New York Times bureau here. Before that she had spent 20 years on the Washington staff of the Chicago Tribune.

A free lance writer, too, she had written fiction stores for magazines and articles on national affairs.

Covered Famous Controversy

Miss Mallon had covered activities of wives of presidents from Theodore Roosevelt to Franklin Delano Roosevelt. She had an exclusive on Alice Roosevelt's engagement to House Speaker Nicholas Longworth and covered the Gann-Longsworth controversy in the Hoover administration. Mrs. Dolly Gann was a sister of the late Vice President Curtis and his official hostess. The controversy arose over whether Mrs. Gann should be accorded the social status of a wife of the Vice President of the United States.

Miss Mallon began her writing career in the cable room of the State Department. In 1902 she turned to free lance journalism and in 1905 became a member of the Chicago Tribune staff. One of her specialities of the Tribune was reporting the suffrage campaign and the enactment of the 19th Amendment. This brought her into close association with Mrs. O.H.P. Belmont, founder of the National Woman's party and donor of its Capitol Hill headquarters.

Mrs. Belmont later commissioned Miss Mallon to come to her home in Paris and help her with her memoirs. On her return to this country, Miss Mallon joined the New York Times staff. She reported national political conventions, hearings on Capital Hill and social Washington.

Helped Found Club

She was one of the organizers and former secretary and president of the Women's National Press Club. She was also a member of the American Press Society, serving on its Board of Governors in 1937, and a member of Theta Sigma Phi.

Miss Mallon was a native of North Evans, N.Y. She was educated at Eastern High School here and at Columbian, now George Washington University.

Survivors are a nephew, Donald Stewart, San Mateo, Calif., and two cousins, Herbert and Howard Black of New York.

Services will be held at 11 a.m. tomorrow at the chapel of Congressional Cemetery, 1801 E street S.E. Burial will be in Congressional Cemetery.

Prominent Business Man Succumbs to Heart Failure

The death of Antonio Malnati, a business man of long experience in the District of Columbia, occurred at 8:30 o'clock last evening at his home, 712 East Capitol street. The immediate cause of his demise was heart failure, and his passing away was described by those who were at his bedside as peaceful, the dying man expressing himself as satisfied with the transition.

Deceased was born in Italy sixty-one years ago, but came to the United States when he was twenty-three, and had since followed his occupation of contractor for stone work.

His establishment in this city is at 5th and V streets northeast. He was married one year after coming to this country, and his wife, Mrs. Lena Malnati, survives him.

It is said he submitted to a surgical operation about three years ago, and has not been entirely well since that time. Announcement is made that the funeral will take place from the family residence at 9:30 o'clock Monday afternoon.

Deceased had many friends in the District and had taken an active part in all movements for the civic advancement of the community.

Last Rites Over Dead

Funeral of Antonio Malnati to Occur Tomorrow

Arrangements have been made for the funeral of the late Antonio Malnati, to take place at 9:30 o'clock tomorrow morning from his late home, 712 East Capitol street. Following the services at the house, the cortege will proceed to St. Joseph's Church, where mass will be said by Rev. Father Ignatius Fealy, after which the remains will be taken to Congressional Cemetery for interment.

The death of Antonio Malnati occurred Thursday evening. He was in the sixty-first year of his age and had been a citizen of the District nearly 33 years. Born near Milan, Italy, he came to this country when he was 23 years of age and followed his trade of stone cutter. Prior to his coming to America he traveled through Germany, Switzerland and France, finally landing at Baltimore July 2, 1869. He worked there until 1872 when he went to Richmond, Va. and then came to Washington, and was engaged as a granite cutter in the construction of the State, War and Navy building.

He later worked on the Washington Monument, and in 1882 engaged in business with the late John Lane, contracting for stone work. Mr. Lane died about nine years ago, since which time Mr. Malnati had been in business for himself. He received many contracts for stone building work in all parts of the District.

His wife, who was formerly Miss Lena Faber, and three children -- Charles, aged thirty years; Virginia and Nettie -- survive him.

A Boy's Sad Death
Victor Malnati Accidentally Hangs
Himself in His Gymnasium
His Sister Discovers The Body
Her Theory as to How He Lost His Life
No Idea of Suicide

There was a death by hanging in East Washington this morning, the victim of the noose not made by a hangman being Victor Malnati, who lived with his parents at No. 818, East Capitol street. The exact circumstances of the boy's death will never be known, although it is generally believed that his death was the result of an accident. Victor Malnati was fifteen years old, and was a very heavy boy for his age. Last year he attended school at the Maury building, where by hard study he succeeded in making for himself a record which entitled him to admission to the Eastern High School at the opening of the next school year in September. He was soon to take a vacation, and spend a month in the country, intending to return in time for the opening of school. The boy was a young athlete, which was the result of his exercising in a roughly made gymnasium in his back shed, and it was in this shed that he met his death at the end of the rope.

A Home Gymnasium
Suspended from a rafter in the center of the shed was a large pulley over which a rope had hung. This rope was used as a trapeze and at times a rudely constructed punching bad was tied to the end of it.

In just what condition the rope was this morning when Victor went to the shed is not known, but when his sister, Miss Jennie Malnati, found his body swinging in the air, the rope was securely fastened to the lower part of the pulley and the knot about his neck had every appearance of having been tied as tightly as possible.

Victor was not an early riser, but he had always been in the habit of going out of the house before eating his breakfast. Sometimes he would go in the gymnasium and exercise, and at other times he would go in the Chinese laundry at the corner and look at the Chinamen ironing clothes. This morning he went out as usual, only a few minutes before 7:30 o'clock, and when breakfast was ready he had to be called.

Discovered by His Sister
Miss Jennie went to the back door and called him, but there was no response. He had been seen to go to the shed and no one had seen him leave there, so the young lady went out in search of him. As she stepped in the shed a heartrending sight met her gaze. There, suspended from the small rope, was the dead form of her brother. Instead of rushing out for assistance, as many a young woman would have done, Miss Malnati ran to the kitchen, procured a knife and cut the rope. While doing this she made an outcry, attracting the other members of the family.

In a few seconds the body was placed on the lawn beneath one of the shade trees and Dr. E.S. Lothrop was at his side. Dr. Richard Kingsman was also called, but although the body was still warm means of artificial respiration applied were of no avail, and when the doctors finally concluded that the boy had passed beyond the aid of medical skill, his body was taken into the house.

Policeman Ehlers was called in and he made a report of the case to the coroner.

No Idea of Suicide
Members of the boy's family are certain that the death of Victor was the result of an accident, and do not have the slightest idea that he committed suicide. He had been in the habit of acting on the trapeze, and they think that this time he made a mistake and slipped. But the knot about his neck was tied so tightly that it is thought by others that he could not have met with the accident in the ordinary trapeze exercises. His sister thinks he had read of the recent executions at the jail and that he probably wanted to imitate what was done there, with the exception of taking his life.

The end of the rope was near the ground, so that the boy's feet must have been touching the floor when his body was found, although his sister is not certain whether sauch was the case, or not, as she was so much excited at the time.

How He Probably Met His Death
Resting about a foot above the floor, on some wood, was the punchbag, and its condition indicated that the boy had stood upon it. His sister thinks that he stood upon the bag, and then swung into the air, thinking he would get the benefit of the sensation of a man who is executed, and at the same time would go back on the bag and rescue himself. In letting go, however, the drop, although only a few inches, was too much for him, and rendered him unconscious, so that, had his body swung back, which is not likely, and his feet fell upon the bag, he could not have saved himself.
The sad affair caused deep sorrow to the neighbors and many friends of the family, a number of whom soon visited the house and tendered their services.

Deceased was a son of Mr. Frank Malnati of the firm of Lane & Malnati, contractors.

_The Evening Star, August 5, 1895_
_His Death Accidental_
_Result of the Coroner's Investigation_
Into the Case of Victor Malnati

Coroner Hamnett has made an investigation of the case of Victor Malnati, the 15-year-old boy who met his death at the end of a rope Saturday morning, as published in Saturday's Star, and gave a certificate of accidental death. Asphyxia is given as the cause of death, and the certificate stated that it was the result of the accidental slipping of the rope while practicing gymnastics. The boy's funeral took place this morning from his parents' home, No. 818, East Capitol street. The body was buried in Congressional cemetery.

Deaths of Mr. James Mankin and Mr. Samuel Pumphrey

Yesterday morning two well-known old citizens died at their homes here. Mr. James Mankin, who had reached the ripe old age of 82, died at his residence, No. 819 9th Street. Mr. Mankin was a native of Maryland, and came here when young. At one time he was an employee of the General Land office, first as a messenger and then as a clerk, and afterwards for some years was an employee of the old Patriotic bank on 7th street near D. For several years, in the days of the municipal corporation, he represented the 3d ward in the board of common council. He was the father of the late J.R.W. Funeral of Capt. Mannix This Afternoon at the Marine Barracks

Funeral services over the remains of the late Capt. D. Pratt Mannix were held today at the marine barracks. All the details of the arrangements were military, and the body was conveyed to the place of interment in Congressional cemetery by the marines. The death of Capt. Mannix will be most keenly felt among the older officers of the U.S. marine corps. Serving his entire career in that historic and efficient arm of the service, he was zealous in maintaining the high reputation which it held. In 1873 he married Miss Stevens, daughter of W.H. Stevens, one of the most enterprising merchants and public spirited citizens of Washington. Mr. Stevens belonged to one of the oldest families of the capital, and was the associate of the Brents, Wallachs, Blairs, Rives and other well-known citizens.

Mrs. Mannix accompanied her husband to China, where she studied the language and gathered many interesting relics of that ancient empire. She assisted her husband in much of his work of detail, and was in entire accord with his interest in advancing the marine corps to the highest point of efficiency.

Mrs. Mannix has a daughter, Romaine, who made her debut at the beginning of the present season, and a son.

<td>The Evening Star, December 26, 1907, p. 3 Long Term of Service Death of Philip Mansfield, Policeman 25 Years Philip Mansfield, who had been connected with the local police department for about twenty-five years, died last night at Providence Hospital, the result of a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered last Sunday afternoon while at a boathouse on the river front. When he was stricken he was removed to the hospital. The physicians found his condition serious, although his death was not then expected to occur soon. The death of Phil Mansfield, as he was called, removes from the force one of its most popular members, and those who served with him will keenly feel the loss of his companionship. He was a native of this city, and was born in 1856. He attended the public schools and was afterward employed in the navy yard as an iron roller, his employment there being upon the manufacture of cable chains for the anchors that were used in the navy and the bolts used on the wooden vessels belonging to the government. Early in May, 1883, he was appointed a member of the police force, doing his first duty in the southeast section of the city, where he resided. Later he was transferred to the sixth precinct, doing duty under Lieut. John F. Kelly. Mansfield performed duty on what was known as the &quot;Swampoodle&quot; beat during the time when the services of strong and fearless men were demanded, and he participated in many fierce struggles. Later on he was detailed in charge of the patrol service at the sixth precinct, being transferred from there to the ninth precinct about nine years ago. He was on duty almost up to the time he suffered the stroke of paralysis, although he was not in good health the past year. Mrs. Mansfield, three daughters and two sons survive him.</td>

Tent of Sorrow

Tribute by Rechabites to the Late Thos. B. Marche

The last meeting of Camaack Tent, No. 56, Independent Order of Rechabites, was set apart as a "tent of sorrow," in memory of a lately deceased and esteemed member, Thomas B. Marche, P.H.T.C.R. Resolutions eulogistic of his Christian life and unselfish work were presented by John R. Mahoney. In the remarks that followed mention was made of his work in Cammack Tent, the Grand Tent, and then as High Tent chief ruler, and as editor of the official organ of the order.

"His work," it was said, "embraced much that will never be told, as he was for many years conspicuous in the highest branches of the order, his connection with it embracing a period of over forty years, and was consequently one of the oldest members in America. The respect in which his tent held him prompts the suggestion to change the name to "Thomas B. Marche Memorial Tent."

Remarks were made during the evening by a number of members and visitors, including Brothers R.E. Swift, J.T. Hensley, W.B. Clark, C.E. Bladen, W.B. Kelly, E.W. Kirby, J.W. Jackson, C. Mills and F. Maddox.

The Wounded Man Dies Six Hours After the Occurrence

Last night about 11 1/2 o'clock, a man named John Mardes received a horrible wound resulting in death, at the hands of James Kelly, under the following circumstances. Both men were employed on the schooner Agnes Ann, which is owned by Capt. Robert M. Miller, and used for hauling white sand from Tangier Sound to this city for the Maryland Freestone Company; Mardes as mate and Kelly as steward. It appears that while going down the river on the 3d day of July they were amusing themselves wrestling, and Mardes getting rather the best of Kelly, the latter became very much enraged, and wanted to fight, which was avoided, however, Mardes saying he did not wish to hurt Kelly, who retorted by saying that he would get even with him (M.) before long. There seemed to be no variance between the two from that time until last night. The schooner returned here last Friday evening. Yesterday afternoon, Kelly went over to Georgetown and purchased a large sheath knife, which was noticed on his return by all on board, who thought there was no use for such an article in his line of business. About 11 1/2 o'clock last night, Capt. Miller while asleep in his bunk was aroused by a scuffling noise, and looking out saw Mardes and Kelly together in the cabin, and Kelly in the act of drawing the knife above mentioned from the abdomen of Mardes. Blood and water in large quantities followed the withdrawing of the weapon and Captain Miller immediately sprang to seize Kelly, who ran out of the cabin, and going ashore, fled hastily up the street. Two colored deck hands immediately started after him, and going a short distance met Officers Harris and Tighlman, who learning the circumstances, joined in the chase, and captured Kelly near the corner of 19th and G streets. Blood was flowing at the time from his right wrist, which, as he was left handed, it is supposed he cut in withdrawing the knife from Mardes' wound. He was taken to the Fourth precinct station, and there kept until this morning. In the meanwhile medical aid was summoned for the wounded man on the schooner. Several physicians refused to come, but finally Dr. E. De W. Breneman, a skillful surgeon, arrived, it being then about half-past one o'clock. He found Mardes suffering much, with a large wound in the left side of the abdomen, through which the intestines protruded, the main intestine being nearly severed. The severed intestine was sewed up with silver wire by Dr. Breneman, and the bowels returned, but the wounded man had lost so much blood that the most skillful services could be but of little benefit to him. Rev. Father Mackin, assistant pastor of St. Mathew's (Catholic) Church, was sent for, and administered religious rites to the sufferer, who died at twenty minutes to 6 o'clock this morning. Mardes, before his death, and in the presence of witnesses, requested that all his property be given to his niece, Miss Alice Johnson, daughter of his sister, Mrs. Olive Johnson, residing in the Seventh Ward—saying that he had made no will, but desired his wishes in regard to the disposition of his property to be carried out.

Deceased was a single man, and about 35 years old, while the prisoner is about 45 years old, both being residents of this city. The body of the deceased was put in ice in the schooner's cabin, where he died, and Coroner Potter notified. He was holding an inquest as our report closed.

The prisoner, who was brought down to the vessel today, to await the result of the inquest, seemed perfectly stolid in his demeanor, and before the arrival of the Coroner coolly chewed his quid of tobacco, at the door of the cabin which contained the dead body of his victim. He acknowledges having committed the deed in an altercation between himself and Mardes.

Retired Policeman Dead

Thomas Markward, Who Served Forty Years, Passes Away

Thomas Markward, a retired policeman, died at his home at Benning last night about 7:45 o'clock, after a month's illness. He was recently retired from the force after a service of nearly forty years. The deceased was a native of the District. He was born the 19th of November, 1826, and was a carpenter by trade. In April 1864, he became a member of the police force and served continuously up to the time of his retirement.

During his long term of service he lost but a short time from duty because of sickness. He was sent to what is now the first precinct at the time of his appointment and performed duty during the time when the soldiers and policemen were clashing every few hours in the day. He made an excellent record as an officer and was commended several times for bravery. For a number of years he was mounted and did duty in the county east of the city. After he was dismounted he was detailed for duty at 15th and H streets northeast, where he was doing duty at the time of his retirement in September of last year.

Although more than 75 years old at the time he was cited to appear for examination for retirement, he protested that he was not physically incapacitated for duty and offered to prove his ability to handle obstreperous persons. His brother officers presented him with a handsome testimonial and set of resolutions at the time his connection with the force was severed.

The deceased leaves a widow and six children, four daughters and two sons. One son is a member of the fire department. His funeral will probably take place from his late home Thursday. The interment will take place at Congressional cemetery.

Mr. Marlow's Sudden Death

Veteran Clerk Expires at Post of Duty in Treasury

Alfred H. Marlow, familiarly known to his associates as "Uncle Al," a veteran employee of the government and said by his superiors to have been one of the most efficient clerks in the office of the auditor for the Navy Department, expired suddenly at his desk in the treasury at 3:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Mr. Marlow had been about his duties as usual during the entire day yesterday. He had an attack of grip about a month ago, but was supposed to have entirely recovered from it. One of his fellow clerks noticed him place his head down on his desk yesterday and ran to his side. Before reaching him, however, Mr. Marlow had expired.

Mr. Marlow was 76 years old. His wife and a son survive him. He entered the government service as assistant messenger July 24, 1862 at a salary of $600 per annum and was promoted each year thereafter, until his salary reached $1,600 per annum. He was reduced to $900 per annum in 1897, because he had reached the age of seventy years. He was again promoted, gradually, however, and the coming July would have been placed back at the salary of $1,600 from which he was reduced.

"He was one of the most efficient clerks in the office," said a clerk in the office to a Star reporter today. "He could do more work in his line than any three young men. In fact there is not a man or woman in the office that can take his place. He was an authority on his work and knew it to his finger tips."

It is understood that Mr. Marlow had been rather depressed of late by reason of the introduction of Representative Gillett's bill to retire all clerks in the classified service of the government upon their reaching the age of seventy years. The matter preyed upon his mind, and it is freely expressed that he grieve himself to death over the possible passage of such a measure, which would result in taking from him the work which he had made a life study.

"Mr. Marlow and his work are conspicuous instances of the made nonsense some members of Congress have attempted in trying to do away with the services of clerks who have given their lives to the service of the country in time of war, and to the government in time of peace. Even though they had reached the age of seven times seventy years, if they are competent to do the work assigned to them, they should be retained," was the manner in which a treasury official spoke of the death of Mr. Marlow this afternoon.

Arrangements are being made to have the funeral services over the remains of Mr. Marlow at his late residence, 308 B street northeast, tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Obituary--Charlie Turner Marlow
This lovely bud, taken from earth to be transplanted in realms of endless bliss, uncontaminated by sin's blighting influence, proves that he was only loaned of God. He was the idol of fond and doting parents, whose hearts with those of many friends have become stricken by this sad bereavement. He suffered three weeks of severe illness, which he bore with Christian patience and submission unknown to childhood. He exhibited not only remarkable intelligence of mind, but unmistakable signs of piety from infancy, not daring to disobey his parents under any circumstances, observing implicitly obedience toward all those who were connected with him. His affectionate disposition and noble traits of character won for him not only the praise and admiration of all, but entwined the hearts of those who knew him so closely around him that he can never be forgotten. He was an affectionate, kind brother, watching over his younger brothers and sister with a mother's love and cure. His parents are enabled only to kiss the afflicting rod by the promises of God's grace, though called at so early an age as eight years to meet his reward, they have the blessed assurance that he died a Christian, and that he has gone to dwell with him who has said, Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven. E.S. Marlow Dies After Long Illness

Was an Official of Potomac Electric Power Company for Many Years

Had Wide Acquaintance in Engineering Circles

Was Born in This City August 23, 1864, and Educated in the City Schools --

Funeral Wednesday

Edwin S. Marlow, manager of the commercial department of the Potomac Electric Power Company, and one of the prominent business men of Washington, died shortly before 7 o'clock this morning after an illness of several months, at his home, 3172 17th street northwest.

Funeral services, arrangements for which have not been completed, are to be held at St. Thomas' Episcopal Church at 10:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, Rev. Dr. C. Ernest Smith officiating. Interment is to be in Congressional Cemetery.

Mr. Marlow died as a result of complications of the liver. Last January he was operated upon at Garfield Hospital, where he was confined until about the middle of April. For several months he was able to be about and resumed his duties with the electric light company. A recurrence of the complaint, however necessitated his removal to Garfield Hospital early in September for a second operation. At that time it was realized that Mr. Marlow's condition was extremely serious, and that his chances for recovery were practically hopeless. Slightly less than two weeks ago he was removed to his home. He was unconscious all of yesterday.

More Than Thirty Years' Service

For more than thirty years Mr. Marlow had been engaged in the electrical business and he had a country-wide acquaintance of engineering and commercial circles.

He started to work as an office boy and assistant bookkeeper for the United States Electric Light Company, predecessor of the Potomac Electric Power Company, in the days when the opportunities for the sale of electric current were limited. He served in various capacities in the company eventually being made manager and eventually being made manager and treasurer positions which he held at the time of the consolidation with the Potomac Electric Power Company. Since that time Mr. Marlow had been manager of the company's commercial department.

He held a position that was unique in electrical circles. Serving in a community in which manufacturing plants are practically unknown and in which, therefore, the sale of electricity is necessarily limited, his efforts were directed to the extension of business among other classes of customers and in this work Mr. Marlow was particularly successful.

Promoted Electric Vehicles

Mr. Marlow was to a large degree responsible for the establishment to this city of a section of the Electric Vehicle Association of America, and he served as chairman of the section until recently, when succeeded by R.B. Emerson. Washington is among the foremost cities in point of electric vehicles in use, particularly of the passenger variety, and this record is due to the activities of Mr. Marlow and his associates. He took a leading part in the organization of sociability runs and in numerous other ways gave impetus to the electric automobile in the National Capital. He was chairman of the reception committee of the Electric Vehicle Association and a member of other national committees of the organization.

Mr. Marlow was widely known in illuminating engineering circles of the country. He was a member of the National Electric Light Association and of the Illuminating Engineering Society. He served as chairman of the general convention committee, which had charge of the convention of the Illuminating Engineering Society, held in this city recently.

Member of Many Organizations
He was a member of many local organizations and always was an enthusiastic participant in their activities. He was a member of the Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, the Commercial Club, the Rotary Club, Columbia Country Club, Blue Ridge Rod and Gun Club, Temple-Noyes Lodge No. 32, F.A.A.M., and was also a Shriner. Mr. Marlow was a charter member of Temple-Noyes Lodge and one of its most active members.

Mr. Marlow was born in this city August 23, 1864. He was educated in the Washington public schools. He was employed at the Second National Bank for a short time before entering the employ of the United States Electric Light Company. Mr. Marlow was married twice his first wife, who was a Miss Pettit before marriage, having died a number of years ago, leaving a son, Leroy Marlow, who is employed in the office of the Potomac Electric Power Company. Mr. Marlow is survived also by his widow, Mrs. Katherine H. Marlow, who was a Miss Neely before marriage, and two children, Jeanette, aged five, and Edwin S. Marlow, jr., aged three.

bucket to swing around with great force, and it struck Martin on the head. He was knocked overboard, being thrown several feet from the boat before he dropped in the water, and although every effort was made to rescue him, life was extinct when the body was recovered. Efforts were made to resuscitate Martin, but this was of no avail. The deceased was an excellent swimmer, but the force of the blow, it is thought, rendered him unconscious, so that he had no control of himself when he struck the water. The case was investigated, but as it was purely an accident, a certificate to this effect was given, and no inquest was held.

Took 14 Year "Recess" After Marriage in 1894, and Returned to Van Buren

Thirty years of active teaching in the public schools of the District will end tomorrow for Mrs. A.L. Martin when she retires as teacher of the second grade at the Van Buren School, Thirteenth and W streets southeast.

Mrs. Martin who will be remembered by many of her older pupils as Miss Emma A. Doyle, has taught at the Van Buren School since 1908, when she returned to the school service after a "recess" of 14 years begun in June 1894, when she was married.

As Miss Doyle, the retiring teacher was first appointed to the service February 1, 1884, when she became a teacher in the Amidon School, Sixth and F streets southwest. In 1888 she was promoted to the Smallwood School where she remained until her marriage when she resigned from the service. Ten years later, however, Mrs. Martin passed a competitive examination for reappointment and she was assigned to the Van Buren School.

Mrs. Martin is a sister of Capt. Robert E. Doyle of the eighth police precinct.

E. Martin, Esq.,
Dear Sir:

It is my painful duty to inform you of the death of your brother, Fred. Martin, on the 25th of July. My acquaintance with him commenced in December last, when he called on me for professional advice in regard to his children. He left here for California in February, with his children, and returned in April. In May he had an attack of sickness from which he soon recovered, and during the remainder of May and part of June, he told me he felt better than he had for years. About the middle of June he sent for me to attend him for a slight attack of diarrhoea, from which he recovered in a few days. In about a week from that time he sent for me again, and I found him suffering with dysentery. He then told me his condition peculiarly, which was that of absolute want. I furnished him with medicine and with some means of subsistence, but finding him sinking, for the want of proper nursing and nourishment, I took him to Providence Hospital on the 11th of July, where he had the best of treatment and attention, but in spite of all care, he sank into a typhoid condition, and died at half past 1 a.m. on the 25th. Before his death he requested me to see him buried and write to you. I attended to his request, and he was buried on the 27th, in Congressional Cemetery. You will find the bill of the undertaker enclosed. He was an entire stranger to him, but on my representations, he kindly agreed to furnish coffin, etc. (I furnishing the cash required for lot and grave-digging) and trust to you for payment. Your brother left some valuable papers, which are in the hands of a party who claims to be his wife. During the short time it was my pleasure to know him, I always found him a gentleman in every respect, whose only faults were those that sprung from an over-generous nature. In fact, it was this generosity that led to his destitution. In his hour of need, those on whom he lavished his favors, basely and cruelly deserted him.

In regard to his children, I promised to attend to Ned until you could be heard from. Hattie is in Chicago, with a Mr. Byrne, whose address I will get and send you. If you desire his remains sent to California, I will attend to it for you. In any way that I can be of service to you, you may command me, and I will obey with pleasure.

Believe me sir,
Yours respectfully,

O.K. Ketcham, M.D.

Overcome By Smoke

George W. Martin Perishes In Burning Stable
Had Gone Into Stall to Rescue Horses--

Cause of the Fire Not Known

In the smoldering ashes of a fire which completely destroyed a bake house and partly consumed a stable about 12:40 o'clock this morning were found the charred remains of a man, later identified as George W. Martin, a cripple, thirty-two years of age, who lost his life while trying to save two horses from a similar fate.

The fire originated in the bake shop of Jacob B. Rohrer, back of 741 8th street southeast, and spread to an adjoining stable. The blaze was discovered by Policemen Cullinane and Gray, who sounded an alarm from box 518, corner of 8th and I streets southeast, and had gained considerable headway by the time the firemen arrived. It was therefore only by the hardest kind of work that a more disastrous fire was averted. As it was, the bake shop owned by Rohrer, was entirely consumed with its contents, and the damage is estimated at about $500.

The flames spread to an adjoining stable in rear of 739 8th street southeast, occupied by William R. Walls, in which were stored two gasoline tank wagons, partly filled with the fluid. The structure was enveloped in flames, and it was at first feared that a serious explosion would occur.

The firemen, however, succeeded in dragging the wagons from the stable before the blaze communicated with the contents of the tanks and an explosion was averted. Two horses kept in the stable could not be reached and were burned to death. The police report that Mr. Walls sustained a loss amounting to about $400.

Search Discloses Body

Martin, who resided with Mr. Rohrer, was not missed from his room until after the fire had been extinguished. His clothing was found on a chair in his room and a search was at once instituted for him. It was not supposed that he had perished in the flames. In examining the stable, however, his body, clad only in undergarments, was found in the stable beside the dead bodies of the horses, which he had attempted to save.

It is supposed that he was awakened before the arrival of the engines and instead of alarming other occupants of the house hastened to the stable, with the purpose of releasing the horses. The smoke, however, was so dense that he was unable to release the animals after entering the structure, and was himself overcome by smoke and fell to the ground, unable to return to the open air. He had made his home with Mr. Rohrer for the last three years.

The unfortunate man was a dealer in second-hand jewelry, and had a place of business at 815 G street northwest. Upon ascertaining the facts Coroner Nevitt decided that death was accidental and issued a certificate accordingly.

The cause of the fire is not known.

A Little Boy Badly Crushed Under A Wagon Wheel

About noon today a very serious accident occurred at the corner of 7th and B streets, by which a small boy named Horace Maynard Martin—a 7-year old son of Capt. Martin, who resides at the corner of 9th and P streets—was seriously—perhaps fatally—injured. It appears that a wagon laden with brick was being driven along by John Javins, and the boy, who was acquainted with the driver, attempted to jump on the wagon from the side. Before he could get up, the front wheel ran into a rut alongside of the railroad track, and jostled the boy off, and he fell directly in front of one of the rear wheels, which passed over him. Javins drew the horses up as soon as possible, and Sergeant Fainter took the injured boy to Gilman's drug store, where Dr. Bulkley attended him, and it was found that he has sustained severe internal injuries, and that some of his ribs were broken. He was subsequently taken to the Children's hospital, on E street, between 9th and 10th streets, where Dr. Duncanson attended him.

Child Badly Burned

Policeman's Little Daughter Overturns Kettle of Boiling Preserves

Lottie Martin, twenty-two months old, daughter of Policeman Martin of the second precinct, was severely burned about the head and body yesterday by upsetting a kettle of hot preserves. The accident occurred about 11 o'clock at the home of the child's parents, No. 1236 H street northeast.

Mrs. Martin was preserving fruit and the child, who was playing about the house, in some way got hold of the kettle and upset the boiling contents on herself. Her mother made an effort to prevent the accident, but was unable to do so. A physician was called in and found that the child's face had been terribly scalded and the body badly burned. The child was taken to the Emergency Hospital for treatment.

The Injuries Fatal

Little Daughter of Policeman Martin Dies at Hospital

Lottie Martin, the little daughter of Policeman Robert Martin, who was so badly scalded about the body and face yesterday at her parents' home, 1236 H street northeast, died at the Emergency Hospital about 6 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Martin, the mother, who was also severely scalded while trying to save the child, was preserving strawberries, when the little one caught hold of a spoon that was in use and pulled the kettle off the stove.

About 4 o'clock this morning the doctors at the hospital saw that the little sufferer had but a short while to live, and her parents were notified. Her father went to the hospital and remained until death claimed her. Her mother was unable to leave her bed. Today the body was removed to the family residence from where the funeral will take place Saturday.

The Evening Star, January 5, 1908, pt. 2, p. 8
Death Comes Instantly
Willard F. Martin Run Down By Express Train
Fatal Accident Occurs Between Langdon and District Line
Coroner Exonerates Trainmen
Willard F. Martin, a local insurance agent, was instantly killed between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon by a fast New York express train on its way north. He was run down between Langdon and the District line.

The accident occurred about one-fourth of a mile north of Langdon, and the unfortunate man was dragged fully two hundred feet before his body was picked up by the train crew and citizens. It was discovered to be in a badly mangled condition.

At the time of his death Martin was employed as a special solicitor by the Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, whose local office is located at 1423 G street. The man was on his way to deliver insurance policies to a number of residents in the vicinity of Langdon. It is presumed he chose to walk along the railroad in order to avoid a long detour by street, and was so unfortunate as to be struck by the train, as stated.

Immediately after the accident he remains were taken in charge by Policeman Schulze of the ninth precinct, and the coroner was notified. Later, the body was removed to the morgue, where it was viewed by Coroner Nevitt, and after he circumstances surrounding the death were inquired into, a certificate of accidental death was issued.

Statement by His Associates
According to his associates Martin left his office yesterday morning with the remark that he would not be back until late in the afternoon, as he proposed to go to Langdon after attending to some minor business in the vicinity of his office. That was the last seen of him until his remains were identified near the scene of his accident. Policeman Schultze, with the assistance of several citizens, carried the body of Martin into Langdon, and took it to the grocery store of E.C. Chaney, where it was held until its removal to the morgue.

The identification was made shortly after the accident, by the unfortunate man's business associates.

Mr. Martin was fifty-two years of age, and made his home with a sister, Mrs. Julia E. Hodges, 476 O street northwest, where he has lived for the past several years. Besides the sister mentioned, three brothers, all of Washington -- Joseph, Robert and John Martin -- and three children -- Clara, who lived with her father at the O street residence, and a married son and daughter -- survive him.

Native of Baltimore
Mr. Martin came to Washington from Baltimore, where he was born, when but a small boy. He received the principal part of his education in the local schools, and was for many years engaged in the retail oil business in the southeastern section of the city, living for many years at 524 7th street southeast.

Five years ago Mr. Martin disposed of his oil business and accepted the position of special solicitor with the insurance company mentioned, in which work he gained an enviable reputation. He was widely known, and his sudden death came as a great shock to his many friends.

The body was removed from the morgue last night to an undertaking establishment, where it was prepared for burial. The funeral will probably take place Monday afternoon, with the interment in the Congressional cemetery. The dead man was a member of long standing of Naval Lodge No. 4, F.A.A.M., and was also a Knight Templar.
V.T. Green of Baltimore, engineer; A.T. Rubezch, Baltimore, fireman, and C.T. Allen, Baltimore, conductor, were in charge of the train which ran down the unfortunate man. All three were exonerated from blame in connection with the death.

The funeral of this worthy, ingenious, and industrious citizen, will take place at 5 o'clock, this evening, from his late residence, near to the office of the National Intelligencer. The circumstances of his death will be more fully stated in our next.

The National Intelligencer, June 30, 1826

Murder of Mr. Martin

As our city possessed no man more respectable or more useful in his sphere of life than Tobias Martin, whose death was announced in our last, and whose mortal remains were yesterday attended to the grave by a great concourse of indignant and sorrowing townsmen, and with military and Masonic honors, some of the particulars of his tragic fate will not be unacceptable to our readers.

At the distance of something more than a mile North of the General Post Office building, and without the bounds of the city, resided a person by the name of Devaughn, who cultivated a field or two there. Into these fields, last Sunday, strayed several boys from the city, in search of blackberries, among whom was a son of Mr. Martin. They were pursued by Devaughn, roughly handled, and the hat and basket taken from young Martin, with the declaration that they should be detained until some money was paid for their redemption. Mr. Martin sent a note out to the man on Monday, asking him to let the hat and basket be returned; of which no notice was taken, he not being at home at the time. On Wednesday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Martin walked out cheerfully together for exercise, and thought they would walk as far as Devaughn's place and persuade him to give up the property he had seized. With this view they went to the house, within the enclosure, and very civilly requested he would return these articles. They were rudely answered with brutal language, and, on Mr. M's expostulating with the man, his sharp and furious dogs were set upon the offending couple. Mr. and Mrs. M. were endeavoring to escape from them, when, one of the dogs having seized Mr. M's coat, he had turned around to defend himself against him, and at that moment received a load of slugs in his breast from a musket deliberately aimed and fired at him by Devaughn. He turned to his wife, who had by this time reached the fence, exclaiming, "I am a dead man!" and, taking her hand, bidding her affectionately "Farewell!" he soon breathed his last. The poor afflicted widow made the best of her way home, herself the bearer of the distressing intelligence. It was not till nearly ten o'clock that the news was known, when several neighbors rode out to the place. The miscreant, who knew his murdered victim lay but a hundred paces from him, had coolly undressed for bed; but, hearing the tramp of horses, jumped over his fence into the lane, taking his musket with him, which he had the audacity to fire at the party, as they came up the lane, fortunately without effect, and then made his escape amidst the gloom of the night and under cover of the adjoining thickets. His musket being loaded with slugs, and every circumstance of the case, establish the animus necandi on the part of the hardened villain. He had no sooner fired the fatal shot, than he loaded again, as if determined to doubly do the horrid deed, already consummated.

Thus perished our neighbor whose place to his family, and as an excellent artisan, cannot be supplied. At the time of his death, and for some months past, his mechanical ingenuity and skill had been employed in the construction of a power press, for the use of the proprietors of this paper -- which was so far advanced and previously tested by a small model, as to leave little doubt of its entire success and efficiency had he lived to complete it. The press was an original invention, neither he nor any one concerned in it ever having seen one on that principle, the pressure being produced, as it is in the English presses, by a revolving cylinder.

Devaugh, the murderer, is represented to us to be a man advanced in years, perhaps sixty, of a stout rough frame, 5 feet 8 or 10 inches high; his hair and whiskers gray, and his face remarkable for the uncommon projection of his under lip. It is hoped that this description will be sufficient to lead to his apprehension.

Since writing the above, we have learned that the verdict of the Coroner's Inquest, after examining, besides other witnesses, the wife and little daughter of Devaughn, was willful murder by said Devaughn.

The National Intelligencer, July 1, 1826

We learn that Devaughn, the person charged with causing the death of Tobias Martin was apprehended yesterday afternoon, and, after examination, committed for further examination today.

The National Intelligencer, May 9, 1827

Sentence of Devaughn

On Saturday last, sentence of death was pronounced at Alexandria, on Jonathan Devaughn, by His Honor Chief Justice Cranch [R45/208]. The following is the address of the Judge to the criminal:

Jonathan Devaughn: You have been convicted of the murder of Tobias Martin, by the verdict of a respectable and impartial jury of your fellow citizens, and upon evidence the most conclusive.

By the evidence it appeared, that a son of the deceased, a lad of about fourteen years of age, with his two younger brothers, on Sunday afternoon, the 25th of June last, went into the country to pick some blackberries, and were found by you in an enclosure belonging to Mr. 2nd Assistant Engineer, U.S. Navy, in which there was no grain or valuable grass which could be injured by them, but which was over-run with briars. Upon your approach, the two younger boys fled; but the elder, unconscious of guilt, suffered you to seize him. When in your power, you beat him severely, deprived him of his hat and basket, and sent him home. On the next day, the father of the boy sent a letter or note to you, requesting you to deliver them up. It did not appear positively, that this note ever came to your hands. It was not produced at the trial, but there is no reason to suppose that it contained anything which could have provoked or palliated the act which you committed on the Wednesday following. There was evidence produced by your counsel, and derived from your own statements, that on Tuesday morning, before daylight, some man had called you up out of your bed, and insulted and provoked you, but that you took ample revenge by beating him and driving him into the ditch, where he lost his hat, which you took into your possession; and that you still bore malice against that man; threatening to kill him if he should return; and that you suspected that man to be Tobias Martin. On the evening of Wednesday, the 28th, a little before sunset, you informed one of the witnesses that you had prepared some slugs, that you had procured a gun, and that you would kill Martin. The witness warned you against using these slugs, informing you that they would certainly kill him. Thus prepared, and thus forewarned, the unsuspecting victim of your malice, with his wife, came to your house, and in the most peaceable and mild manner, informed you they were the parents of the boy whose hat and basket you had taken on Sunday, and requested you to return them. They did not even reproach you for your violence to the boy. In a fierce and angry manner you falsely answered that the hat and basket were at Mr. Moore's, where they might go and pay the damage, and get them. Upon Mrs. Martin's asking what the damage would be, you fiercely answered that they might go to Mr. Moore, and they would know, ordered them to go off immediately, threatened to shoot them, set your dog upon them, and went into your house for your gun. They ran with precipitation down the hill, with the dog after them. Mrs. Martin fell in the ditch, but recovered, and ran about twenty yards further to the fence, when she looked around and saw her husband contending with the dog, with his face towards the house. At that moment she saw the flash, heard the report, and heard you say, repeatedly, "Take that, you rascal, and run." Her husband said he was shot; she ran to him; he was throwing blood from his mouth; she led him to the fence where his strength failed; he said he was killed; she laid him down, and ran to the City for medical aid. The report of the gun, and the savage yells and execrations, were heard at the distance of two hundred and fifty yards, by two very respectable witnesses, Mr. Dashiel and Mr. Heall. Mr. Dashiel being alarmed, and fearing that some mischief had been done, ran over to your house, and found you reloading your gun. He asked you what innocent person you had been shouting. Your reply was, "I put it to him." "I have given him his own." It was after sunset, but so light that a man might be distinctly seen at the distance of two hundred yards. Upon the alarm of murder being given, you fled; and, after two days' search, you were taken by surprise in the edge of a wood.

Even if express malice aforethought had not been proved, and if you had not avowed your determination to commit homicide, the rash and reckless manner in which you shot at the deceased, even if it had been in the dark, would have evinced a disposition so regardless of human life, and a heart so fatally bent upon mischief, as to amount in law to that degree of malice, which is a necessary ingredient in the crime of murder.

I have briefly recapitulated the facts of your case, not with a view of exciting the popular indignation against you, or of torturing your feelings -- but in the hope that a deep sense of your guilt may lead you to a hearty contrition; that you may obtain forgiveness of Him who alone can search the heart -- whose judgments only are unerring, and who is ever ready to receive humble and penitent sinners. And I exhort you, by all your hopes of everlasting happiness in a future state of existence, and by all your fears of eternal and unutterable woe, to devote the few days which may be allowed you here on earth, to prepare for that awful tribunal before which all hearts must be opened, and from which no secret can be hid.

The painful duty remains to pronounce that solemn sentence which the law of your country has affixed to the crime of which you have been convicted. That sentence is --

That you be taken hence to the place from whence you came, and thence to the place of public execution, and that you there be hanged by the neck until you are dead. And may God Almighty have mercy on your soul.

This sentence is to be executed on the last Wednesday of June next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock of that day.

_The National Intelligencer, June 23, 1827_

The sentence of the law was yesterday carried into execution at Alexandria, on the body of Jonathan Devaugh, convicted of the murder of Tobias Martin, a respectable citizen of Washington; his trial having been removed, by a change of venue, from this place to Alexandria. The execution took place about half a mile North of the town, about 2 o'clock, in the presence of an immense concourse of people. To the last moment he preserved the same hardihood and unmoved or unfeeling spirit which he has displayed from the moment of his apprehension. A more desperate and irreclaimable criminal perhaps never expiated his crime on a scaffold.

Heights, Va., floating in the river near the Highway bridge, Mallet and Johnson were fishing when they sighted the body.

Martin was a carpenter. He was unmarried. His brother identified the body at the morgue and told the authorities that William had not been home for a week. He had been in the habit of visiting the city and remaining a week or more at a time and there was no reason last week for his relatives to become uneasy about him. The condition of his clothing made it apparent that Martin had fallen overboard accidentally.

Coroner Nevitt gave a certificate of death from accidental drowning. The body was taken from the morgue today by an undertaker and prepared for burial.

bucket to swing around with great force, and it struck Martin on the head. He was knocked overboard, being thrown several feet from the boat before he dropped in the water, and although every effort was made to rescue him, life was extinct when the body was recovered. Efforts were made to resuscitate Martin, but this was of no avail. The deceased was an excellent swimmer, but the force of the blow, it is thought, rendered him unconscious, so that he had no control of himself when he struck the water. The case was investigated, but as it was purely an accident, a certificate to this effect was given, and no inquest was held.

Aug. 1, 1877
E. Martin, Esq.,
Dear Sir: |
| It is my painful duty to inform you of the death of your brother, Fred. Martin, on the 25th of July. My acquaintance with him commenced in December last, when he called on me for professional advice in regard to his children. He left here for California in February, with his children, and returned in April. In May he had an attack of sickness from which he soon recovered, and during the remainder of May and part of June, he told me he felt better than he had for years. About the middle of June he sent for me to attend him for a slight attack of diarrhoea, from which he recovered in a few days. In about a week from that time he sent for me again, and I found him suffering with dysentery. He then told me his condition pecuniarily, which was that of absolute want. I furnished him with medicine and with some means of subsistence, but finding him sinking, for the want of proper nursing and nourishment, I took him to Providence Hospital on the 11th of July, where he had the best of treatment and attention, but in spite of all care, he sank into a typhoid condition, and died at half past 1 a.m. on the 25th. Before his death he requested me to see him buried and write to you. I attended to his request, and he was buried on the 27th, in Congressional Cemetery. You will find the bill of the undertaker enclosed. He was an entire stranger to him, but on my representations, he kindly agreed to furnish coffin, etc. (I furnishing the cash required for lot and grave digging) and trust to you for payment. Your brother left some valuable papers, which are in the hands of a party who claims to be his wife. During the short time it was my pleasure to know him, I always found him a gentleman in every respect, whose only faults were those that sprung from an over-generous nature. In fact, it was this generosity that led to his destitution. In his hour of need, those on whom he lavished his favors, basely and cruelly deserted him. |
| In regard to his children, I promised to attend to Ned until you could be heard from. Hattie is in Chicago, with a Mr. Byrne, whose address I will get and send you. If you desire his remains sent to California, I will attend to it for you. In any way that I can be of service to you, you may command me, and I will obey with pleasure. |
Yours respectfully,
O.K. Ketcham, M.D.

George W. Martin Perishes In Burning Stable

Had Gone Into Stall to Rescue Horses--

Cause of the Fire Not Known

In the smoldering ashes of a fire which completely destroyed a bake house and partly consumed a stable about 12:40 o'clock this morning were found the charred remains of a man, later identified as George W. Martin, a cripple, thirty-two years of age, who lost his life while trying to save two horses from a similar fate.

The fire originated in the bake shop of Jacob B. Rohrer, back of 741 8th street southeast, and spread to an adjoining stable. The blaze was discovered by Policemen Cullinane and Gray, who sounded an alarm from box 518, corner of 8th and I streets southeast, and had gained considerable headway by the time the firemen arrived. It was therefore only by the hardest kind of work that a more disastrous fire was averted. As it was, the bake shop owned by Rohrer, was entirely consumed with its contents, and the damage is estimated at about $500.

The flames spread to an adjoining stable in rear of 739 8th street southeast, occupied by William R. Walls, in which were stored two gasoline tank wagons, partly filled with the fluid. The structure was enveloped in flames, and it was at first feared that a serious explosion would occur.

The firemen, however, succeeded in dragging the wagons from the stable before the blaze communicated with the contents of the tanks and an explosion was averted. Two horses kept in the stable could not be reached and were burned to death. The police report that Mr. Walls sustained a loss amounting to about $400.

Search Discloses Body

Martin, who resided with Mr. Rohrer, was not missed from his room until after the fire had been extinguished. His clothing was found on a chair in his room and a search was at once instituted for him. It was not supposed that he had perished in the flames. In examining the stable, however, his body, clad only in undergarments, was found in the stable beside the dead bodies of the horses, which he had attempted to save.

It is supposed that he was awakened before the arrival of the engines and instead of alarming other occupants of the house hastened to the stable, with the purpose of releasing the horses. The smoke, however, was so dense that he was unable to release the animals after entering the structure, and was himself overcome by smoke and fell to the ground, unable to return to the open air. He had made his home with Mr. Rohrer for the last three years.

The unfortunate man was a dealer in second-hand jewelry, and had a place of business at 815 G street northwest. Upon ascertaining the facts Coroner Nevitt decided that death was accidental and issued a certificate accordingly.

The cause of the fire is not known.

The National Intelligencer, Wednesday, July 1, 1835

On Friday, as a train of cars was proceeding on the Columbia Railroad, a cow which had been feeding at the side of the way sprang across the track, was knocked down and killed by the wheels of the locomotive. This threw the locomotive, and the second and fourth car from the track. Mr. Gilbert Martin, one of the agents standing on one of the cars, fearing that he should be thrown down, attempted to leap towards the fence. He slipped, and his foot caught in the rail; a car hit him and threw his head on the track, and the next car passed and killed him.

The Evening Star, May 13, 1873

A Little Boy Badly Crushed Under A Wagon Wheel

About noon today a very serious accident occurred at the corner of 7th and B streets, by which a small boy named Horace Maynard Martin—a 7-year old son of Capt. Martin, who resides at the corner of 9th and P streets—was seriously—perhaps fatally—injured. It appears that a wagon laden with brick was being driven along by John Javins, and the boy, who was acquainted with the driver, attempted to jump on the wagon from the side. Before he could get up, the front wheel ran into a rut alongside of the railroad track, and jostled the boy off, and he fell directly in front of one of the rear wheels, which passed over him. Javins drew the horses up as soon as possible, and Sergeant Fainter took the injured boy to Gilman's drug store, where Dr. Bulkley attended him, and it was found that he has sustained severe internal injuries, and that some of his ribs were broken. He was subsequently taken to the Children's hospital, on E street, between 9th and 10th streets, when Dr. Duncanson attended him.

Crushed to Death

The little boy, H.M. Martin, who was run over by a brick wagon and seriously injured near the corner of 7th and B streets northwest yesterday, (as stated in THE STAR last evening,) died at the Children's Hospital, to which he was taken. The coroner, Dr. Patterson, held an inquest on the body at 6 o'clock last evening, and the witnesses having been heard, a verdict was rendered that the deceased came to his death by reason of injuries inflicted by being crushed under the wheel of a loaded wagon driven by one John Javens; and they further find that the affair was accidental, and that no blame can be attached to the said John Javens. The coroner then ordered the release of Javens. The remains of the boy were taken to the father's residence, corner of 9th and P streets northwest.

Child Badly Burned

Policeman's Little Daughter Overturns Kettle of Boiling Preserves

Lottie Martin, twenty-two months old, daughter of Policeman Martin of the second precinct, was severely burned about the head and body yesterday by upsetting a kettle of hot preserves. The accident occurred about 11 o'clock at the home of the child's parents, No. 1236 H street northeast.

Mrs. Martin was preserving fruit and the child, who was playing about the house, in some way got hold of the kettle and upset the boiling contents on herself. Her mother made an effort to prevent the accident, but was unable to do so. A physician was called in and found that the child's face had been terribly scalded and the body badly burned. The child was taken to the Emergency Hospital for treatment.

The Injuries Fatal

Lottie Martin, the little daughter of Policeman Robert Martin, who was so badly scalded about the body and face yesterday at her parents' home, 1236 H street northeast, died at the Emergency Hospital about 6 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Martin, the mother, who was also severely scalded while trying to save the child, was preserving strawberries, when the little one caught hold of a spoon that was in use and pulled the kettle off the stove.

About 4 o'clock this morning the doctors at the hospital saw that the little sufferer had but a short while to live, and her parents were notified. Her father went to the hospital and remained until death claimed her. Her mother was unable to leave her bed. Today the body was removed to the family residence from where the funeral will take place Saturday.

Death Comes Instantly
Willard F. Martin Run Down By Express Train
Fatal Accident Occurs Between Langdon and District Line
Coroner Exonerates Trainmen

Willard F. Martin, a local insurance agent, was instantly killed between 12 and 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon by a fast New York express train on its way north. He was run down between Langdon and the District line.

The accident occurred about one-fourth of a mile north of Langdon, and the unfortunate man was dragged fully two hundred feet before his body was picked up by the train crew and citizens. It was discovered to be in a badly mangled condition.

At the time of his death Martin was employed as a special solicitor by the Fidelity Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, whose local office is located at 1423 G street. The man was on his way to deliver insurance policies to a number of residents in the vicinity of Langdon. It is presumed he chose to walk along the railroad in order to avoid a long detour by street, and was so unfortunate as to be struck by the train, as stated.

Immediately after the accident he remains were taken in charge by Policeman Schulze of the ninth precinct, and the coroner was notified. Later, the body was removed to the morgue, where it was viewed by Coroner Nevitt, and after he circumstances surrounding the death were inquired into, a certificate of accidental death was issued.

Statement by His Associates
According to his associates Martin left his office yesterday morning with the remark that he would not be back until late in the afternoon, as he proposed to go to Langdon after attending to some minor business in the vicinity of his office. That was the last seen of him until his remains were identified near the scene of he accident. Policeman Schultze, with the assistance of several citizens, carried the body of Martin into Langdon, and took it to the grocery store of E.C. Chaney, where it was held until its removal to the morgue.

The identification was made shortly after the accident, by the unfortunate man's business associates.

Mr. Martin was fifty-two years of age, and made his home with a sister, Mrs. Julia E. Hodges, 476 O street northwest, where he has lived for the past several years. Besides the sister mentioned, three brothers, all of Washington -- Joseph, Robert and John Martin -- and three children -- Clara, who lived with her father at the O street residence, and a married son and daughter -- survive him.

Native of Baltimore
Mr. Martin came to Washington from Baltimore, where he was born, when but a small boy. He received the principal part of his education in the local schools, and was for many years engaged in the retail oil business in the southeastern section of the city, living for many years at 524 7th street southeast.

Five years ago Mr. Martin disposed of his oil business and accepted the position of special solicitor with the insurance company mentioned, in which work he gained an enviable reputation. He was widely known, and his sudden death came as a great shock to his many friends.

The body was removed from the morgue last night to an undertaking establishment, where it was prepared for burial. The funeral will probably take place Monday afternoon, with the interment in the Congressional cemetery. The dead man was a member of long standing of Naval Lodge No. 4, F.A.A.M., and was also a Knight Templar.
V.T. Green of Baltimore, engineer; A.T. Rubezch, Baltimore, fireman, and C.T. Allen, Baltimore, conductor, were in charge of the train which ran down the unfortunate man. All three were exonerated from blame in connection with the death.

_A Little Girl Burned to Death_
Yesterday afternoon Rebecca Martin, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. Herbert Martin, living on Harrison street, in Uniontown, while playing with matches set fire to her clothes, and in a few minutes the child was completely enveloped in flames. Mrs. Martin and Officer Anderson went to her assistance, and succeeded in tearing the burning clothes from the child, in accomplishing which Mrs. Martin was badly burned about the hands. Dr. Little was called in and found that the child had been fatally burned, the upper part of the body being roasted to a crisp. She suffered intense agony until relieved by opiates. Within about six hours after the accident, death ended her sufferings.

We thought him dying when he slept,

The National Intelligencer, June 29, 1826

After this paper was prepared for press, the information reached us of the violent death of our neighbor, Tobias Martin, whitesmith by trade, who was wantonly shot at and killed by a person living on the borders of the city, by the name of Devaughn. The murderer is not yet taken, and we are authorized to offer Fifty Dollars Reward for his apprehension.
The funeral of this worthy, ingenious, and industrious citizen, will take place at 5 o’clock, this evening, from his late residence, near to the office of the National Intelligencer. The circumstances of his death will be more fully stated in our next.

Murder of Mr. Martin

As our city possessed no man more respectable or more useful in his sphere of life than Tobias Martin, whose death was announced in our last, and whose mortal remains were yesterday attended to the grave by a great concourse of indignant and sorrowing townsmen, and with military and Masonic honors, some of the particulars of his tragic fate will not be unacceptable to our readers.

At the distance of something more than a mile North of the General Post Office building, and without the bounds of the city, resided a person by the name of Devaughn, who cultivated a field or two there. Into these fields, last Sunday, strayed several boys from the city, in search of blackberries, among whom was a son of Mr. Martin. They were pursued by Devaughn, roughly handled, and the hat and basket taken from young Martin, with the declaration that they should be detained until some money was paid for their redemption. Mr. Martin sent a note out to the man on Monday, asking him to let the hat and basket be returned; of which no notice was taken, he not being at home at the time. On Wednesday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Martin walked out cheerfully together for exercise, and thought they would walk as far as Devaughn’s place and persuade him to give up the property he had seized. With this view they went to the house, within the enclosure, and very civilly requested he would return these articles. They were rudely answered with brutal language, and, on Mr. M’s expostulating with the man, his sharp and furious dogs were set upon the unoffending couple. Mr. and Mrs. M. were endeavoring by flight to escape from them, when, one of the dogs having seized Mr. M’s coat, he had turned around to defend himself against him, and at that moment received a load of slugs in his breast from a musket deliberately aimed and fired at him by Devaughn. He turned to his wife, who had by this time reached the fence, exclaiming, "I am a dead man!" and, taking her hand, bidding her affectionately "Farewell!" he soon breathed his last. The poor afflicted widow made the best of her way home, herself the bearer of the distressing intelligence. It was not till nearly ten o’clock that the news was known, when several neighbors rode out to the place. The miscreant, who knew his murdered victim lay but a hundred paces from him, had coolly undressed for bed; but, hearing the tramp of horses, jumped over his fence into the lane, taking his musket with him, which he had the audacity to fire at the party, as they came up the lane, fortunately without effect, and then made his escape amidst the gloom of the night and under cover of the adjoining thickets. His musket being loaded with slugs, and every circumstance of the case, establish the animus necandi on the part of the hardened villain. He had no sooner fired the fatal shot, than he loaded again, as if determined to doubly do the horrid deed, already consummated.

Thus perished our neighbor whose place to his family, and as an excellent artisan, cannot be supplied. At the time of his death, and for some months past, his mechanical ingenuity and skill had been employed in the construction of a power press, for the use of the proprietors of this paper -- which was so far advanced and previously tested by a small model, as to leave little doubt of its entire success and efficiency had he lived to complete it. The press was an original invention, neither he nor any one concerned in it ever having seen one on that principle, the pressure being produced, as it is in the English presses, by a revolving cylinder.

Devaugh, the murderer, is represented to us to be a man advanced in years, perhaps sixty, of a stout rough frame, 5 feet 8 or 10 inches high; his hair and whiskers gray, and his face remarkable for the uncommon projection of his under lip. It is hoped that this description will be sufficient to lead to his apprehension.

Since writing the above, we have learned that the verdict of the Coroner's Inquest, after examining, besides other witnesses, the wife and little daughter of Devaughn, was willful murder by said Devaughn.

The National Intelligencer, July 1, 1826

We learn that Devaughn, the person charged with causing the death of Tobias Martin was apprehended yesterday afternoon, and, after examination, committed for further examination today.

The National Intelligencer, May 9, 1827

Sentence of Devaughn

On Saturday last, sentence of death was pronounced at Alexandria, on Jonathan Devaughn, by His Honor Chief Justice Cranch [R45/208]. The following is the address of the Judge to the criminal:

Jonathan Devaughn: You have been convicted of the murder of Tobias Martin, by the verdict of a respectable and impartial jury of your fellow citizens, and upon evidence the most conclusive.

By the evidence it appeared, that a son of the deceased, a lad of about fourteen years of age, with his two younger brothers, on Sunday afternoon, the 25th of June last, went into the country to pick some blackberries, and were found by you in an enclosure belonging to Mr. 2nd Assistant Engineer, U.S. Navy, in which there was no grain or valuable grass which could be injured by them, but which was over-run with briars. Upon your approach, the two younger boys fled; but the elder, unconscious of guilt, suffered you to seize him. When in your power, you beat him severely, deprived him of his hat and basket, and sent him home. On the next day, the father of the boy sent a letter or note to you, requesting you to deliver them up. It did not appear positively, that this note ever came to your hands. It was not produced at the trial, but there is no reason to suppose that it contained anything which could have provoked or palliated the act which you committed on the Wednesday following. There was evidence produced by your counsel, and derived from your own statements, that on Tuesday morning, before daylight, some man had called you up out of your bed, and insulted and provoked you, but that you took ample revenge by beating him and driving him into the ditch, where he lost his hat, which you took into your possession; and that you still bore malice against that man; threatening to kill him if he should return; and that you suspected that man to be Tobias Martin. On the evening of Wednesday, the 28th, a little before sunset, you informed one of the witnesses that you had prepared some slugs, that you had procured a gun, and that you would kill Martin. The witness warned you against using these slugs, informing you that they would certainly kill him. Thus prepared, and thus forewarned, the unsuspecting victim of your malice, with his wife, came to your house, and in the most peaceable and mild manner, informed you they were the parents of the boy whose hat and basket you had taken on Sunday, and requested you to return them. They did not even reproach you for your violence to the boy. In a fierce and angry manner you falsely answered that the hat and basket were at Mr. Moore's, where they might go and pay the damage, and get them. Upon Mrs. Martin's asking what the damage would be, you fiercely answered that they might go to Mr. Moore, and they would know, ordered them to go off immediately, threatened to shoot them, set your dog upon them, and went into your house for your gun. They ran with precipitation down the hill, with the dog after them. Mrs. Martin fell in the ditch, but recovered, and ran about twenty yards further to the fence, where she looked around and saw her husband contending with the dog, with his face towards the house. At that moment she saw the flash, heard the report, and heard you say, repeatedly, “Take that, you rascal, and run.” Her husband said he was shot; she ran to him; he was throwing blood from his mouth; she led him to the fence where his strength failed; he said he was killed; she laid him down, and ran to the City for medical aid. The report of the gun, and the savage yells and execrations, were heard at the distance of two hundred and fifty yards, by two very respectable witnesses, Mr. Dashiel and Mr. Heall. Mr. Dashiel being alarmed, and fearing that some mischief had been done, ran over to your house, and found you reloading your gun. He asked you what innocent person you had been shouting. Your reply was, “I put it to him.” “I have given him his own.” It was after sunset, but so light that a man might be distinctly seen at the distance of two hundred yards. Upon the alarm of murder being given, you fled; and, after two days' search, you were taken by surprise in the edge of a wood.

Even if express malice aforethought had not been proved, and if you had not avowed your determination to commit homicide, the rash and reckless manner in which you shot at the deceased, even if it had been in the dark, would have evinced a disposition so regardless of human life, and a heart so fatally bent upon mischief, as to amount in law to that degree of malice, which is a necessary ingredient in the crime of murder.

I have briefly recapitulated the facts of your case, not with a view of exciting the popular indignation against you, or of torturing your feelings -- but in the hope that a deep sense of your guilt may lead you to a hearty contrition; that you may obtain forgiveness of Him who alone can search the heart -- whose judgments only are unerring, and who is ever ready to receive humble and penitent sinners. And I exhort you, by all your hopes of everlasting happiness in a future state of existence, and by all your fears of eternal and unutterable woe, to devote the few days which may be allowed you here on earth, to prepare for that awful tribunal before which all hearts must be opened, and from which no secret can be hid.

The painful duty remains to pronounce that solemn sentence which the law of your country has affixed to the crime of which you have been convicted. That sentence is --

That you be taken hence to the place from whence you came, and thence to the place of public execution, and that you there be hanged by the neck until you are dead. And may God Almighty have mercy on your soul.

This sentence is to be executed on the last Wednesday of June next, between the hours of 12 and 3 o'clock of that day.

The sentence of the law was yesterday carried into execution at Alexandria, on the body of Jonathan Devaughn, convicted of the murder of Tobias Martin, a respectable citizen of Washington; his trial having been removed, by a change of venue, from this place to Alexandria. The execution took place about half a mile North of the town, about 2 o'clock, in the presence of an immense concourse of people. To the last moment he preserved the same hardihood and unmoved or unfeeling spirit which he has displayed from the moment of his apprehension. A more desperate and irreclaimable criminal perhaps never expiated his crime on a scaffold.

Body Found in River
Drowning of William Martin Believed to Have Been Accidental
Louis Mallett of 1004 Rhode Island avenue northwest and William Johnson of 1624 9th street northwest yesterday morning found the body of William Martin, thirty-seven years old, who resided at Dominion Heights, Va., floating in the river near the Highway bridge, Mallet and Johnson were fishing when they sighted the body.

Martin was a carpenter. He was unmarried. His brother identified the body at the morgue and told the authorities that William had not been home for a week. He had been in the habit of visiting the city and remaining a week or more at a time and there was no reason last week for his relatives to become uneasy about him. The condition of his clothing made it apparent that Martin had fallen overboard accidentally.

Coroner Nevitt gave a certificate of death from accidental drowning. The body was taken from the morgue today by an undertaker and prepared for burial.

Farewell, dear loved one, but not forever,
There will be a glorious dawn;
We shall meet to part, no, never,
On the resurrection morn.
Though your darling form lies sleeping
In the cold and silent tomb,
You will have a glorious waking
When our divine Lord says come.
We weep, though your toils are over,
But rejoice in sweet assurance,
He giveth His loved ones sleep.

Died on the Street
Last night, about 11 o'clock, Officers Oliver and Loan, of the 5th precinct, found the dead body of James Mason laying on E street, between 13th and 13 1/2 streets. They removed the remains which were yet warm, to the central guardhouse, and Dr. Tree was called in and gave it as his opinion that the deceased died of apoplexy. He was an Englishman by birth, about 35 years of age, a cook by trade, and has been employed at the St. James hotel in this city. Dr. Potter was sent for, and arriving this morning deemed it unnecessary to hold an inquest. Deceased had been drinking pretty freely of late. |

Obituary

Died, in November last, Richard B. Mason, Esq. for many years a resident of this District, aged about fifty years.

In endeavoring to get on board of a steamboat from the wharf in Alexandria on the night of the 7th November last, Mr. Mason fell into the river and was drowned; and although untiring efforts were made to recover the body for several successive days, yet no traces of it were discovered till Saturday morning, the 5th instant, when it was found floating in the river near the spot where it is supposed to have fallen. On Sunday his funeral took place from his late residence.

Mr. Mason belonged to one of the oldest and best families of the State of Virginia, and inherited many of their best traits. He was zealous in all his purposes, ardent and devoted in his friendships, unbending in his integrity, unbounded in his liberality, and with firmness and courage unquestioned. He has left behind him a most interesting family to lament his death, and a large circle of friends and acquaintances who cannot soon forget his many acts of hospitality and disinterested kindnesses.

Massari. Departed this life on Saturday, September 9, 1893, at 6:15 o'clock, after a long and painful illness, at his residence, 650 E street southeast, Emmanuel Massari, beloved husband of Hattie Massari.

The Evening Star, August 12, 1893
Funeral of Emanuel Massari

Emanuel Massari, an ex-member of the Marine Band, died at his home, 650 E street southeast, Saturday of consumption. For twenty years Mr. Massari was a soloist in the Marine Band and as a musician he ranked high. He served throughout the late war and was a member of the Grand Army. He was also a Knight of Pythias and a member of the Italian society, all of which organizations attended his funeral this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in a body. The interment was made at Congressional cemetery. The deceased left a wife and two children.

The Evening Star, July 26, 1925 (The Rambler)

You have read in these rambles mention of Emmanuel Massari. I have sought a picture of this celebrated musician and have found one, but the difficulty of reproducing it seemed great and I believed that a satisfactory "cut" for a newspaper could not be made from it. Further on in this series I may show you Massari's picture. He was born at Naples in 1843. When he came to the United States I do not know, but he enlisted in the Navy in January 1861, and served as a musician in the ship Susquehanna until 1863. September 4, that year, he "enrolled" in Capt. Osborn Wattson's company -- Company I, 3d Pennsylvania Artillery -- and remained with that command until honorably discharged, November 9, 1865, at Fort Monroe on the muster-out of the company. His discharge is signed, "H.C. Corbin, assistant adjutant general."

After the Civil War he enlisted again in the Navy, and I have seen his honorable discharge signed, John H. Stephenson, paymaster, but I have no information where his service was. He enlisted in the Marine Corps as a musician in 1873, and soon after that the Rambler finds him a member of the Marine Band and living at 650 E street southeast.

He married Miss Harriet Biondi of Washington, a daughter of Antonio Biondi. ...

Emmanuel Massari and his wife Hattie had two children, John and Edith, or Eva, who live in Washington. Emmanuel was retired by the Marine Corps in 1881 on account of physical disability. He taught music and played in private bands and orchestras. Old musicians and the older people on the Navy Yard speak of him with esteem.

Killed at a Funeral
A Washington Lady Struck By A Railroad Train Near Baltimore

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Adeline Massey, aged 65, of No. 1114 8th street southeast, was instantly killed at the Frederick road station, near Baltimore, by being stuck by the Chicago limited express train which leaves Baltimore at 4:25 p.m. Together with about seventy relatives and friends she had attended the interment at Loudon Park of John Philip Souder, a brother of her son-in-law, Dr. W. Souder. After the burial the people assembled at the platform. There are three trains passing in quick succession, and the ticket agent, Joseph Kingsley, who also acts as baggage-master states that he found it necessary to leave open the door which leads from the station down to the track, and so a number of the party got down stairs just as the express, of which Jacob Frey is engineer, came along. Albert Souder, the little grandson of Mrs. Massey, ran across the track. She started after him, and everybody shouting to her seems to have confused her. She stopped between the two tracks, and the engine stuck her on the head and ight shoulder, crushing both and killing her instantaneously. Justice Pilet was notified and a jury empaneled.

After hearing the evidence, the jury found "that she came to her death by neglect of the Baltimore and Potomac railroad company in not giving the proper signal of ringing the engine bell, and in not keeping the platform gate closed until the arrival of the accommodation train." The remains were enclosed in a coffin and brought to he home in this city last night.

The Evening Star, September 25, 1863

Melancholy Accident

A melancholy accident occurred yesterday afternoon on the gunboat Wyandank, by which Acting Master's Mate Alfred P. Mathews of this city, was instantly killed. It appears that the quarter gunner, Thomas Seeger, was engaged in cleaning a revolver, when, by some means as yet unexplained, one of the barrels was discharged, the ball entering the right breast of Mr. Mathews, and, it is supposed, cut the main artery of the heart, as he bled profusely and died without uttering a word. Mr. M. has been in the navy since the breaking out of the rebellion, and has spent most of his time in the Potomac Flotilla, among the officers and men of which he was deservedly popular. He was well known throughout this city, and he leaves a large number of friends to mourn his loss. The accident occurred when the boat was off Chickamoxsin, and immediately the flags were displayed at half-mast, and the boat returned to the Navy Yard, arriving here this morning.

The death occurred about three weeks ago, and was attended by most distressing circumstances. Our correspondent adds that the unfortunate man left his family, consisting of a wife and six young children, in an entirely destitute condition, deserving as well as needing the help of those who can afford to extend aid to the poor and suffering.

Death of Old and Prominent Citizens

Professor George A. Matile, of the Patent Office library, died suddenly at his room, No. 423 11th street, yesterday afternoon, of apoplexy, while seated at his desk writing. He was about 65 years of age, and a native of Switzerland, where he was a classmate at College with the late Professors Agassiz and Guyot, the three having come to this country together. Prof. Matile has written extensive and valuable treatises upon international law which are regarded as standard authorities in France and Germany. He was attacked with vertigo last Monday, on the steps of the Patent Office, and falling sprained his ankle. Since then he had been confined to the house. He leaves a wife and two grown children.

The Lutheran Observer, February 25, 1881

Death of Prof. Matile

Dear Dr. Conrad:

I offer this tribute of respect to one who was recently gone from our midst. Prof. George A. Matile was born in Switzerland, on the 30th of May, 1807. He died at Washington, D.C., on Sunday morning, February 6th, 1881. For the past three years he has been a parishioner of St. Paul's English Lutheran Church, worshipped with us, and communed with us at the Lord's table. He was a remarkable man, and merits moe than the mention I can make of him in this communication. He came into this country in 1849, landing at New York. He came to Washington in 1862, under the administration of President Lincoln, and since then has been in the service of the government with the exception of one year, during which he was employed as antiquarian correspondent, in the land of their adoption. Of this trio of remarkable men, Prof. Guyot, of Princeton College, N.J., Prof. Matile was a man of great scholarly attainments. He was a graduate with Profs. Agassiz and Guyot at the university of Neuchatel, Switzerland, the former having been one day older, and the other three days younger than Mr. Matile. These men came over to this country about the same time, and having been associated together from boyhood, they kept up that association by correspondence, in the land of their adoption. Of this trio of remarkable men, Prof. Guyot, of Princeton College, alone remains. A letter from Guyot was received only a few days before the death of Mr. Matile. He spoke of this letter with tender interest, as coming from so precious a friend.

After his graduation at the university of Neuchatel, Prof. Matile prosecuted his studies a while longer at Berlin and Paris. He was a thorough classical scholar, had studied the Hebrew, and spoke with more or less readiness nearly all the languages of Europe. He understood the Arabic, and was, in short, a polyglottal scholar. He was a graduate in the department of law, then became a professor in the law-school of the university at which he was graduated. Afterwards he became a practitioner of law, and was subsequently promoted to a judgeship in one of the cantons of Switzerland. Sometime after his arrival in America, he was admitted to the Philadelphia bar, and practiced law, for several years, in that city. He was the author of several works on International Law, which are regarded as valuable contributions to law literature in Switzerland, Germany and France. He was also a frequent contributor to the press both in this country and Europe. In scientific researches he took prominent rank, and because of his scientific attainments he was called, for a time, to the museum of Princeton College. He had made himself familiar also, with the great questions of modern thought. The skepticism of both hemispheres he had studied with great ability, thoroughness and care. The profoundest theological literature engaged his attention, and with his own pen he had translated some valuable discussions in polemic theology. But what I would specially emphasize is the Christian character of this man. As such his name must be added to the roll of Christian scholars and scientists, with such men as Prof. Henry, of the Smithsonian Institute, Profs. Agassiz, Guyot, and others, whose profounder gaze has rested on the gates of jasper and pearl, whose ears have listened to the voice of God sounding out from the crays and summits of creation, and whose testimony to the Divine Christ is in harmony with the song the angels sing.

Mr. Matile was a man of strong religious convictions. Into these he had come by rigid and careful processes of independent investigation. He was a critical student of the Bible. His French New Testament was always at hand, and it was filled with annotations, showing his careful and constant study of the divine word. The prevalent agnosticism of the age he regarded as unworthy of respect. He denounced it was empty of scientific truth, and, in rational thought, as baseless as it was impudent and pernicious. His testimony to the trutly of Christianity was unequivocal, intelligent, fearless. Christ was to him no vague abstraction, no mythological uncertainty, but a personal Saviour, and the word of God his only infallible rule of faith and practice.” When the final hour came, he was busy at the Master's work. No long confinement to a sick-room preceded his departure. Only an attack of vertigo, and a little consequent weakness, indicated the approach of the evening shadows. He was seated at his desk early on Sunday morning, writing an article on the temperance reform for the New York Witness, when the wish and prayer of his life were answered in a sudden and painless death. His pen fell on the unfinished article, and with drooping head he passed into the last sleep! No one was present when he died except his cherished and devoted wife. His funeral was attended by many of his associates in office. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Schurz, acted as one of the pallbearers. Passing out of the house, the honorable Secretary remarked: "I have known Mr. Matile for many years, he was an upright, noble man.” A heritage of distinguished greatness and goodness he has left to his wife and children, and a glorious testimony to Christianity and the Church by his scholarly, useful and consecrated life: “So shine out the stars in heavens high dome.”

Very kindly
S. Donner
Washington, D.C., February 15, 1881
Matlovich, Leonard

Leonard P. Matlovich, 44, a former Air Force sergeant whose 1975 discharge after his avowed homosexuality became a major gay rights rallying point died June 22 at the home of a friend in Los Angeles. He had AIDS.

Mr. Matlovich, a 12-year Air Force veteran who was awarded a Bronze Star and Purple Heart for combat service in Vietnam fought the discharge in military and civilian courts for 5 years. The case drew nationwide attention as a symbol of the struggle to stop discrimination against gay men and lesbians.

In September 1975, Mr. Matlovich's picture appeared on the cover of Time Magazine in connection with an article entitled "The Gay Drive for Acceptance". The inscription under the photograph was "I am a homosexual."

Eventually he settled out of court with the Air Force for $160,000 in exchange for an agreement to give up his battle for readmission.

In later years, Mr. Matlovich was active in a variety of gay and lesbian causes in Washington and on the West Coast and in several support organizations involved with AIDS.

He made his decision to test the military's ban on homosexuals near the end of the summer of 1974 after several hours of conversation and counseling with Franklin Kameny, a Washington-based gay rights activist. At the time Sgt. Matlovich had served 11 years in the Air Force, and he had received exemplary efficiency ratings in addition to his combat decorations. He was a technical sergeant and a human relations specialist at Langley Air Force Base.

The following March, Sgt. Matlovich sent a memorandum to his commanding officer at Langley declaring that, "After some years of uncertainty I have arrived at the conclusion that my sexual preferences are homosexual as opposed to heterosexual. I have also concluded that my sexual preferences will in no way interfere with my Air Force duties ..."

Sgt. Matlovich said at the time that his first homosexual experience had been in 1973 with a government civil servant whom he met in a gay bar in Pensacola, Fla. After that, he said, his sexual partners had included doctors, lawyers and two other airmen, but he said he had never been threatened with blackmail.

"My partners have all been persons about my age or slightly younger ... and have without exception been respectable average citizens," he said in a letter to Air Force investigators.

Historically the Air Force and other services had excluded homosexuals on the grounds that they would threaten "discipline, good order, morale and security ... wholesome and healthful environment."

On receiving Sgt. Matlovich's memorandum, his commanding officer initiated steps to get the sergeant out of the service. Sgt. Matlovich asked for a hearing before a five-member discharge panel which recommended a general discharge. The recommendation was approved by Air Force Secretary John McLucas.

... He was wounded in Vietnam when he stepped on a Viet Cong land mine, and he won a Bronze Star for killing two soldiers during a Viet Cong attack on his post while he was on sentry duty.

Mattingly of the government printing office will take place at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon from the family residence, 1234 Columbia road, the interment to be at the Congressional cemetery. The death of Mr. Mattingly occurred Saturday evening, the immediate cause being Bright's disease, superinduced, it is said, by a fall he had bout five weeks ago. His leg was broken, and then the malady that proved fatal followed.

Mr. Mattingly was a veteran employee of the printery, having been appointed by Gen. U.S. Grant in 1869. His widow, formerly Miss Anna M. Skirving, and four children -- Clarence, aged twenty-one years; Lillian, twelve years; Ruth, ten years, and Mrs. H.E. Hunt of Braddock, Pa. -- survive him.

Maury, John W.

46 yrs.

On Friday, February 2d, at fifteen minutes before one o'clock p.m., at his residence in this city, in the 46th year of his age, John W. Maury. He closed his earthly career in the meridian of life and in the fruition of every thing that could make life desirable. The ardent devotion of a large and most interesting family; the warm attachment of a very extended circle of friends; the admiration and confidence of a whole community; the recorded honors of high and delicate official trust, and a large fortune, the product of his industry and enterprise, were the rewards that blessed his years.

The life of this most estimable citizen was marked by a career so pure, active, unobtrusive, benevolent, and useful, that friendship, confidence, popularity, and every social tribute gathered around him and stamped him as one of our best and most valued citizens. He had a generous heart to appreciate and treasure up these testimonials, and most unostentatiously did he wear his good eminence. His only ambition seemed to be to make himself useful in his day and generation, and to preserve an unblemished reputation. Our city, in its prosperity and improvement, and the united voice of praise and commendation, bear testimony that he worked out most successfully the end and aim of his ambition.

The deep gloom that now hangs over our city at this sad dispensation is a tribute to his memory, and the profound sympathy that is everywhere expressed is proffered to his heart-stricken family.

The funeral of Mr. Maury will take place on Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, from his late residence.

Solemn Ceremonies

And yesterday a large proportion of our population and many strangers were in attendance at the funeral of the late Mayor of the city, John W. Maury, Esq. His remains were conveyed to Trinity Church in the afternoon, where the Rev. Dr. Cummings read the impressive funeral services of the Episcopal Church, and delivered an affecting and eloquent discourse; and the church services were closed by a most feeling and impressive prayer from the Rev. Dr. Smith, of the Ninth Street Presbyterian Church.

The church was crowded to overflowing and the streets thronged with sympathizing friends. Judging by the test thus given, it may be safely remarked that the death of no citizen within the last quarter of a century has created so general a feeling of sincere sorrow. Though but forty-six years of age, it was truly said by the pastor that the good man before him had not lived in vain.

A Handsome Testimonial

We have accidentally omitted a notice of the elegant testimonial about to be presented to John W. Maury, Esq., late Mayor of the city, by some of his friends who set a just value upon his official services and estimate truly his excellent qualities as a citizen. It was prepared at the well-known and tasteful jewelry establishment of M.W. Galt & Brother. This service of silver, we learn, consists of two massive, graceful and superb wine pitchers, twelve neatly-wrought gold-lined goblets, and one large and finely-executed salver -- the whole being tastefully embellished with wreaths, engraved in the richest most exquisite, and brilliant style of art, (known as the antique or bright style of engraving,) and producing a combination singularly uniform, beautiful, and substantial. The cost of this magnificent service is about one thousand dollars.

The first house of note (No. 302) dates from 1837 as the home of the late John W. Maury, and it is where he died in February, 1855, at the early age of 46. It continued to be the family home for the remainder of his widow's life, and three of the daughters are still living there.

Mr. Maury became a resident of Washington about 1829 or 1830, his first residence being the house now numbered 325, which originally was a double house two stories in height, with a large front yard. In recent years a portion of it has been used for a small dwelling on the east side, but otherwise it has remained unchanged for more than 70 years.

Mr. Maury's first business occupation was that of a broker. Prior to 1846 he was one of the directors of the Bank of the Metropolis (now National Metropolitan) and upon the death of General Van Ness in that year he became president to the bank and was holding that position when he died. Mr. Maury was one of the representative citizens in those days and was Mayor of the city in 1852 and 1853.

His eldest son, Mr. Wm. A. Maury, the surviving son of the family, who is still a resident of Washington, tells me that he was born in the house above mentioned, where his father had his first home. He has been well known for many years as a prominent member of the bar, and was at one time associated with the late James M. Carlisle, in that profession. Mr. Maury was one of the Assistant Attorneys-General of the U.S. from 1882 to 1893.

A Wedding

Yesterday from noon until four p.m., there was a very large assemblage of carriages on C street, between 4 1/2 and 3d street. The cause was the marriage of Dr. Thomas Maury to Miss "Georgie", the eldest daughter of our well-known, esteemed, and respected fellow-citizen, Mr. George Parker; Dr. M. being the third son of the late ex-Mayor Maury. About two hundred guests were present at the ceremony, which was performed by the Rev. Dr. Cummins. Many hundreds more attended shortly afterward, until the spacious reception room of Mr. Parker's residence were crowded to overflowing. The bridesmaids were Miss Lizzie Parker, Miss Alice Maury, Miss Sarah Franklin, Miss Smith (a step daughter of Mr. Luke Lea), Miss Abbot, of Georgetown, and Miss Ludlum, of New York; the groomsmen were Mr. John Maury, Doctor Hughes, Dr. Levick, Mr. John Franklin, Mr. Rossiter, and Dr. Trotter.

A long table was visible in one of the apartments decorated with some sixty or seventy valuable presents to the bride from relatives and friends of the two families thus united; costly, rich and rare, as appropriate for such an occasion. Of course, a magnificent entertainment was provided for the entertainment of his guests; for Mr. George D. Parker and his hospitable family are celebrated for the elegance, good taste, and profusion of their generous hospitality.

The happy pair accompanied by the entire bridal party, departed by the evening train for a trip North.

Married. In this city, last evening (10/5/1824) by the Rev. Mr. Hardey, Dr. George W. May and Miss Catherine Hite Lee, youngest daughter of Theodoric Lee, Esq.

p. 373: Catharine Hite, "was like her sisters distinguished for beauty, benevolence and intellect." She married Dr. George May, a graduate of Harvard and a Bostonian by birth; he was for years one of the leading physicians of Washington city; they had two daughters: Sophia Catharine, who died on the 5th of July, 1894, unmarried, and Juliana Gales May, who resides at Washington, and is unmarried.

Dr. May was one of the oldest and most deservedly respected inhabitants of Washington, of which he had been a resident for nearly fifty years, during all the time practicing his profession with great assiduity and success, having been for many years the oldest Physician in our city.

His most estimable personal character secured to him, whilst he lived, not the respect merely, but the affection, of all who knew him well; and, dying, he leaves to lament his loss, besides a wide circle of sorrowing friends, a family of sons and daughters grown up to manhood and maturity, to whom he was one of the most affectionate and devoted Fathers that ever lived.

Dr. Miller, on the part of the committee, presented the following biographical sketch and resolutions:

It becomes our painful duty to announce to you and the Medical Society the loss we have sustained by the death of our beloved and venerable President, Dr. Frederick May. He died on the 23d instant, at 9 1/2 p.m., in the 74th year of his age. Dr. May was one of the oldest residents of this city, and the oldest physician in it. Soon after the attainment of the degree of M.D. at the college in his native State, (Massachusetts,) he removed to this city, and settled in the practice of his profession. This occurred as early as the year 1795. At this period our city was a mere wilderness, and we believe he was the only practitioner of medicine. Soon he succeeded in securing the confidence of those then resident here; and, as the city increased in population, so did he add to his popularity and professional usefulness. He was, for many years, the physician and surgeon of Washington, and attended the most distinguished men of the country, assembled here at the seat of Government. In the even tenor of his way he passed on, with his professional standing ever gaining as he increased in years, and he saw spring from the wilderness a magnificent city.

In the year 1823 upon the establishment of a medical school in this city, he was appointed to the Chair of Obstetrics. In this he distinguished himself as a lecturer. As such, by the soundness of his doctrines, and by the beautiful and classic style of his lectures, by the urbanity and gentleness of his manner, he commanded the regard and confidence of his associates, and the admiration of his pupils. He continued his labors as professor in this school until its reorganization, which took place in 1839. Though solicited to retain his position, he declined, but continued to pursue the practice of his profession till overtaken by infirmities, induced rather by laborious professional life than by the effects of age.

Within the last year of his life he had withdrawn from its active duties, having filled the measure of his highest ambition by the attainment of an enviable position in his profession; by having reared to maturity and usefulness a numerous offspring; by having acquired the love and esteem of a large circle of friends, and among them the whole medical profession of this city; and last, not least, by having secured, as far as in his power lay, the hopes of a blessed immortality. He lived a bright example to his professional friends and brethren; and when called to yield his spirit to his God, he proved the importance and value of a well spent life. We are aware that custom has sanctioned elaborate and high-sounding praise of the merits and deeds of the dead; that overweening zeal often leads us to attach too exalted a value to the actions of deceased friends. In the present instance the charge cannot be alleged for we have but to speak the truth, and that truth will be praise enough; and by it, if but accurately portrayed, we shall recognize the man while living.

The life of medical men in private practice presents but few incidents from which to make an interesting or lengthened biography; but when these are characteristic, and serve as beacon lights by which rising generations may be governed, they should be shown forth. In the life and character of our friend, we have an example most worthy of imitation; his early struggles, distant from home and from friends, with no superfluity of earthly riches surrounded by strangers--yes, even in a wilderness attaining, by his exertions and his merits alone, the highest honors and distinctions of his profession; and still to retain so high a rank as to be looked upon as the guide--ay, as a patriarch of that profession--having for his reward wealth, the esteem of all his professional brethren, and this the result purely of his own exertion and merits.

It was not by the possession of ordinary talents and professional skill that this was attained, it was not by assumption that it was arrived at. No: it was by his untiring zeal in the profession--his interest in its welfare, and by that constant and uniform courteous bearing (so characteristic of him) to all the members of the profession, that gave him the confidence and esteem of those nearest his age and standing, whilst these, together with his marked consideration for the juniors in the profession gained him their warmest regard. No one ever possessed the latter quality in a higher degree than did Dr. May. None ever more ready to extend assistance, to inspire and sustain laudable ambition in the enterprising aspirant for fame in his profession, and none ever more prompt or more successful in placing before such bright example and sound precept.

As evidence of the high esteem entertained for Dr. May be his professional brethren of our city, there was seldom a post of honor or distinction at their disposal for which he did not receive the unsolicited and unanimous voice of the profession. Over our medical councils he was ever called to preside. At the period of his death he was the presiding officer, not only of the body, but the Medical Association of Washington in all conferences of the profession for the promotion of its interests and welfare, he was ever consulted, and his views appreciated. But recently he was re-elected President of this society, although it was known that he was unwilling to accept this office, lest he should be incapable from ill health of discharging its duties. Yet he was unanimously re-elected, and a complimentary notice accompanying the announcement of his election was received by him but a short period before his death. These marks of distinction were fully appreciated by him, and he was never allowed an opportunity to escape that he did not, in his unassuming and unostentatious manner, acknowledge them.

The early education of Dr. May, as is the case with all the profession in this country, fitted him for the practice of its several branches. Whilst he engaged in the duties of a general practitioner, he, at an early period of his professional life, became particularly devoted to obstetrics and diseases of women, in this branch he became most distinguished, and was most extensively and successfully engaged. Few can boast of possessing a more extensive confidence among the female set than he, and none more deservedly. As an obstetrician he was unsurpassed--patient, trusty, yet skilful and firm. His example will be long remembered by his contemporaries, while the succeeding generation will have much to regret, in the absence of any written record of his observation and experience. In his professional intercourse we have said that he was courteous; to his patients he was mild, gentle, conciliating in his manners, observing always the utmost delicacy. To his professional brethren the word courteous can scarcely convey a proper idea of his course of conduct. Conciliating, dignified, and confiding, prompt and punctual in his professional engagements, he was seldom ever known to be a minute before or after time; he often would impress on his juniors in the profession the importance of the observance of punctuality, and, when it was not observed, his gentle chiding and admonition gave rather pleasure than offence. In his intercourse with society he was much restricted, his time being so wholly devoted to his profession duties, though none, we are informed, in the earlier periods of his life enjoyed social intercourse more than he. Honorable and just in all his dealings, he maintained the highest respect and regard among his unprofessional friends. In his habits regular and temperate; in this respect being a bright example not only to our profession, but to the community at large. It was, however, in his private relations that the character of our friend shone most beautifully. Though actively engaged in the duties of an arduous profession, yet he so arranged his time as to be able to enjoy the social pleasures of the family fireside.

Deprived by death early in life of the partner of his bosom, he devoted himself closely to the education of a large family of children, who by his paternal care were reared to maturity and usefulness, and who now prove themselves the not unworthy offspring of a most honored sire. Tutored by such a hand, who could have expected otherwise of them! To his friends it is peculiarly gratifying, and to himself it was a source of great comfort, that he should have lived to have experienced the completion of his efforts for his family. More than once he would express his thankfulness and gratitude on this point, and conclude by saying that he had nothing now to live for; that he had fulfilled the duties assigned to man; that he had completed his task, and was now ready and willing to depart. It is true, indeed, he had fulfilled his duties to his country, his profession, his family, and his God.
It was our melancholy privilege to witness the last moments of Dr. May. For more than a year has his life been ebbing. Several attacks of disease enervated a constitution already shaken by laborious professional duties, which he was now compelled to relax; though up to within a few months past he continued to give advice to a few friends, or meet his brethren in consultation. About the 1st of November it became necessary for him to confine himself to the house for a very slight indisposition. From this time he rapidly emaciated without an assignable cause, without suffering a single pang, and this condition existed to the last: gradually day by day he declined, looking forward for the approach of death, of which he spoke familiarly. But one wish on earth remained ungratified. It was to see his sisters and brother. With the greatest anxiety he watched their coming, hoping that they would reach here whilst he was in the enjoyment and possession of his faculties. This wish was gratified; they came, he recognized them, conversed with them, blessed them, and then slept that long sleep of death, from which he will only be awakened by the last trump.

Dr. M. then moved the following resolutions:
Resolved, That the Medical Society of the District of Columbia have heard with deep emotion the announcement of the death of their venerable President, Dr. Frederick May.

Will of Frederick May, of Washington City, D.C. (dtd. Jan. 21, 1847, probated March 9, 1847; Book 6, pp. 122-123, Box 19)

My servant man Charles and my servant woman Harriet shall be free in 5 years after my decease.

A History of the City of Washington, Its Men and Institutions
(Found under biography of Colonel Henry May -- grandson of Frederick May)
The Mays of this country are from the Anglo-Norman family of De Maies (such it seems was the original spelling), and are the descendants of two Knights, Eleaz and John De Maies, of the Demesne of Barfleur, Val de Saire, Normandy. These gentlemen entered England in the suite of William the Conqueror, and for valorous services at the battle of Hastings were, by royal charter granted the manor known as "King's Chase," afterwards Mayfield, in the county of Sussex. Here the family lived in opulence, and as befitted their rank, up to the close of the "War of the Roses," when through such misfortunes as overcame many others of the nobility, they were reduced in circumstances, and turned their attention to business pursuits. A descendant of Eleaz and John De Maies was John May, born at Mayfield, England, in 1590. In 1616 he came to America in the ship St. James, landing at Boston, and subsequently locating at Roxbury, Massachusetts, where the family lived for many years and where were born and reared some of its illustrious sons. John May here died in 1670. Colonel John May, a grandson of the American pioneer of the family, was a soldier in the Continental army of the revolutionary war; served as colonel in the First Massachusetts Regiment, and later did service under Rochambeau in the Rhode Island campaign. He was also a member of that band of patriots who composed the "tea party" in Boston harbor on that memorable December 16, 1773.

When Washington was but a straggling town, attractive only in location, Frederick May moved here from Roxbury, Massachusetts. He took up his residence in New Jersey avenue, on Capitol Hill, in what is now known as the "May residence," a place of historic interest, and still in good state of preservation.

Frederick May had six sons:
John Frederick May, Surgeon
Charles May, Colonel, 2nd Drogoons, U.S. Army
George May, Merchant at New Orleans
Hon. Henry May, Member of Congress and Lawyer
William May, U.S. Navy saw service in Mexico and South Pole Expedition
Julian May, Mounted Rifles, U.S. Army saw service in Mexican War

May, Juliana Gales
At her residence in this city, February 22, 1901, Juliana Gales May, youngest daughter of the late Dr. George W. May. Funeral services at Saint John's Episcopal Church on Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Interment private.

Below the reader will find an extract from the Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia North American concerning the rising American cantatrice. Many of our fellow-citizens will remember her as Miss Juliana May, the daughter of our late fellow-citizens, Dr. George May, and the cousin of Dr. John Frederick May, the Hon. Henry May, and Col. Charles A. May, U.S.A. Her mother is the daughter of the late Theodore Lee, Esq., and the sister of Mrs. Joseph Gales of this city. Possessing a remarkable voice and figure, the latter giving evidence of a strong constitution, this talented and beautiful young lady has studied her profession much longer and more assiduously, under the best masters of Italy, than any other American. We have frequently heard of her eminent success and promise, from travellers on the continent, and have looked forward to hear of her brilliant debut with great interest indeed. We fear that it will be some years before she returns to the United States, as the Empressarios of Europe will hardly be apt to let such an operatic card as she turns out to be, slip through their fingers, if money can retain her in Europe.

An American cantatrice is rising on the musical horizon, and, to judge from present efforts, bids fair to shed abroad no faint light when she attains to her noonday attitude; or, in more appropriate language, to make her roulades and fioreture heard some day far and wide. Miss May is the name of this American swan, or nightingale, whichever appellation the lady most delights in -- a songstress not unknown, if I am rightly informed, to the musical world of Philadelphphi, and now just returned with renewed inspiration from Italy.
Miss Juliana May has completed her musical studies in Italy and will soon return to this country. She is said to have a powerful sweet and well-toned voice which has been most exquisitely cultivated.

The New York Times, 1857

Miss May's Concert

Miss Juliana May, an attractive American lady, who has recently returned from Europe, where she has been pursuing a course of thorough musical instruction, made her debut here on Tuesday night, (Niblo's Saloon,) and was greeted by a fair audience. Miss May sang three solos and assisted in a couple of concerted pieces, thereby affording her hearers ample opportunity of forming a judgment of her probable powers. We say probable, for although Miss May seemed to be but slightly affected by the novelty of her situation, it is but reasonable to suppose that greater assurance of her public, will give her increased ease, and better nerve for delivering the many polished elegances of the musical art which may only be touched by the firmest hand. Miss May's voice has been trained with much success, the most noticeable result being a perfect equality of tone. This is the more creditable inasmuch as it is of a hard and naturally intractable character. It is neither a mezzo soprano nor a contralto voice, but partakes of the characters of both kinds, with most of the coloring of the last named. Miss May has achieved some flexibility, and can fly to the higher regions with melodiousness and ease, but there is at present an apparent hardness in the immediately available compass of her voice. Its full vibratory quality and sonority have not yet been developed, and we are, therefore, justified in believing that, with practice, Miss May will greatly improve. A lack of animation—of musical electricity—we may also kindly refer to, as an evidence of recent routine which may well be dispensed with. Without any exhibition of great powers, we look on Miss May's debut as a success of which she may be proud, and as one which gives promise of future excellence. It is unnecessary to refer to the pieces in which she sang. They were of the usual concert pattern, and mostly from Verdi.

May. On yesterday morning at 4 o'clock, on the Capitol Hill, in this City, aged 29 years, Mrs. Julia M. May, the wife of Dr. Frederick May, to the great grief of her husband and numerous friends, to whom she was endeared, by every virtue which could adorn a wife, a daughter, and a mother. In all those relations she was exemplary in her conduct and deportment, but, to her numerous offspring, consisting of eight small children, her loss will be irreparable, to whom she was not only the most tender of parents, but the most discreet teacher and instructress, in those principles of piety and virtue, which would insure their future happiness and render them useful to society. It has been the will of God, that she should be called from the discharge of those precious duties to a better world, and the only consolation left for her friends is in patient submission to the divine will, and proclaiming, in humble resignation, "O Lord, thy will be done".

The funeral will take place this morning at 11 o'clock precisely, from the house of Dr. May, which the friends and acquaintances of the family are invited to attend.

May, Dr. Frederick
d. 26 Jan 1847
The National Intelligencer, January 25, 1847
At his residence in this city, on Saturday night, at half-past 9 o’clock, in the 74th year of his age, Dr. Frederick May.

Dr. May was one of the oldest and most deservedly respected inhabitants of Washington, of which he had been a resident for nearly fifty years, during all the time practicing his profession with great assiduity and success, having been for many years the oldest Physician in our city.

His most estimable personal character secured to him, whilst he lived, not the respect merely, but the affection, of all who knew him well; and, dying, he leaves to lament his loss, besides a wide circle of sorrowing friends, a family of sons and daughters grown up to manhood and maturity, to whom he was one of the most affectionate and devoted Fathers that ever lived.

The National Intelligencer, January 29, 1847
The Late Dr. Frederick May
At a meeting of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, held January 25th, at the Washington Infirmary, Dr. James C. Hall, one of the Vice Presidents, in the chair, the death of Frederick May, M.D., the late President of the Society, having been announced by the Chairman--

On motion of Dr. Miller, a committee was appointed to draught resolutions suitable to the mournful occasion.

The Chair appointed Drs. Miller, Jones, and Reily as the committee.

Dr. Miller, on the part of the committee, presented the following biographical sketch and resolutions:

It becomes our painful duty to announce to you and the Medical Society the loss we have sustained by the death of our beloved and venerable President, Dr. Frederick May. He died on the 23d instant, at 9 1/2 p.m., in the 74th year of his age. Dr. May was one of the oldest residents of this city, and the oldest physician in it. Soon after the attainment of the degree of M.D. at the college in his native State, (Massachusetts,) he removed to this city, and settled in the practice of his profession. This occurred as early as the year 1795. At this period our city was a mere wilderness, and we believe he was the only practitioner of medicine. Soon he succeeded in securing the confidence of those then resident here; and, as the city increased in population, so did he add to his popularity and professional usefulness. He was, for many years, the physician and surgeon of Washington, and attended the most distinguished men of the country, assembled here at the seat of Government. In the even tenor of his way he passed on, with his professional standing ever gaining as he increased in years, and he saw spring from the wilderness a magnificent city.

In the year 1823 upon the establishment of a medical school in this city, he was appointed to the Chair of Obstetrics. In this he distinguished himself as a lecturer. As such, by the soundness of his doctrines, and by the beautiful and classic style of his lectures, by the urbanity and gentleness of his manner, he commanded the regard and confidence of his associates, and the admiration of his pupils. He continued his labors as professor in this school until its reorganization, which took place in 1839. Though solicited to retain his position, he declined, but continued to pursue the practice of his profession till overtaken by infirmities, induced rather by laborious professional life than by the effects of age.

Within the last year of his life he had withdrawn from its active duties, having filled the measure of his highest ambition by the attainment of an enviable position in his profession; by having reared to maturity and usefulness a numerous offspring; by having acquired the love and esteem of a large circle of friends, and among them the whole medical profession of this city; and last, not least, by having secured, as far as in his power lay, the hopes of a blessed immortality. He lived a bright example to his professional friends and brethren; and when called to yield his spirit to his God, he proved the importance and value of a well spent life. We are aware that custom has sanctioned elaborate and high-sounding praise of the merits and deeds of the dead; that overweening zeal often leads us to attach too exalted a value to the actions of deceased friends. In the present instance the charge cannot be alleged for we have but to speak the truth, and that truth will be praise enough; and by it, if but accurately portrayed, we shall recognize the man while living.

The life of medical men in private practice presents but few incidents from which to make an interesting or lengthened biography; but when these are characteristic, and serve as beacon lights by which rising generations may be governed, they should be shown forth. In the life and character of our friend, we have an example most worthy of imitation; his early struggles, distant from home and from friends, with no superfluity of earthly riches surrounded by strangers--yes, even in a wilderness attaining, by his exertions and his merits alone, the highest honors and distinctions of his profession; and still to retain so high a rank as to be looked upon as the guide--ay, as a patriarch of that profession--having for his reward wealth, the esteem and confidence of all his professional brethren, and this the result purely of his own exertion and merits.

It was not by the possession of ordinary talents and professional skill that this was attained, it was not by assumption that it was arrived at. No: it was by his untiring zeal in the profession--his interest in its welfare, and by that constant and uniform courteous bearing (so characteristic of him) to all the members of the profession, that gave him the confidence and esteem of those nearest his age and standing, whilst these, together with his marked consideration for the juniors in the profession gained him their warmest regard. No one ever possessed the latter quality in a higher degree than did Dr. May. None ever more ready to extend assistance, to inspire and sustain laudable ambition in the enterprising aspirant for fame in his profession, and none ever more prompt or more successful in placing before such bright example and sound precept.

As evidence of the high esteem entertained for Dr. May be his professional brethren of our city, there was seldom a post of honor or distinction at their disposal for which he did not receive the unsolicited and unanimous voice of the profession. Over our medical councils he was ever called to preside. At the period of his death he was the presiding officer, not only of the body, but the Medical Association of Washington in all conferences of the profession for the promotion of its interests and welfare, he was ever consulted, and his views appreciated. But recently he was re-elected President of this society, although it was known that he was unwilling to accept this office, lest he should be incapable from ill health of discharging its duties. Yet he was unanimously re-elected, and a complimentary notice accompanying the announcement of his election was received by him but a short period before his death. These marks of distinction were fully appreciated by him, and he was never allowed an opportunity to escape that he did not, in his unassuming and unostentatious manner, acknowledge them.

The early education of Dr. May, as is the case with all the profession in this country, fitted him for the practice of its several branches. Whilst he engaged in the duties of a general practitioner, he, at an early period of his professional life, became particularly devoted to obstetrics and diseases of women, in this branch he became most distinguished, and was most extensively and successfully engaged. Few can boast of possessing a more extensive confidence among the female set than he, and none more deservedly. As an obstetrician he was unsurpassed--patient, trusty, yet skilful and firm. His example will be long remembered by his contemporaries, while the succeeding generation will have much to regret, in the absence of any written record of his observation and experience. In his professional intercourse we have said that he was courteous; to his patients he was mild, gentle, conciliating in his manners, observing always the utmost delicacy. To his professional brethren the word courteous can scarcely convey a proper idea of his course of conduct. Conciliating, dignified, and confiding, prompt and punctual in his professional engagements, he was seldom ever known to be a minute before or after time; he often would impress on his juniors in the profession the importance of the observance of punctuality, and, when it was not observed, his gentle chiding and admonition gave rather pleasure than offence. In his intercourse with society he was much restricted, his time being so wholly devoted to his profession duties, though none, we are informed, in the earlier periods of his life enjoyed social intercourse more than he. Honorable and just in all his dealings, he maintained the highest respect and regard among his unprofessional friends. In his habits regular and temperate; in his private relations that the character of our friend shone most beautifully. Though actively engaged in the duties of an arduous profession, yet he so arranged his time as to be able to enjoy the social pleasures of the family fireside.

Deprived by death early in life of the partner of his bosom, he devoted himself closely to the education of a large family of children, who by his paternal care were reared to maturity and usefulness, and who now prove themselves the not unworthy offspring of a most honored sire. Tutored by such a hand, who could have expected otherwise of them! To his friends it is peculiarly gratifying, and to himself it was a source of great comfort, that he should have lived to have experienced the completion of his efforts for his family. More than once he would express his thankfulness and gratitude on this point, and conclude by saying that he had nothing now to live for; that he had fulfilled the duties assigned to man; that he had completed his task, and was now ready and willing to depart. It is true, indeed, he had fulfilled his duties to his country, his profession, his family, and his God.
It was our melancholy privilege to witness the last moments of Dr. May. For more than a year has his life been ebbing. Several attacks of disease enervated a constitution already shaken by laborious professional duties, which he was now compelled to relax; though up to within a few months past he continued to give advice to a few friends, or meet his brethren in consultation. About the 1st of November it became necessary for him to confine himself to the house for a very slight indisposition. From this time he rapidly emaciated without an assignable cause, without suffering a single pang, and this condition existed to the last: gradually day by day he declined, looking forward for the approach of death, of which he spoke familiarly. But one wish on earth remained ungratified. It was to see his sisters and brother. With the greatest anxiety he watched their coming, hoping that they would reach here whilst he was in the enjoyment and possession of his faculties. This wish was gratified; they came, he recognized them, conversed with them, blessed them, and then slept that long sleep of death, from which he will only be awakened by the last trump.

Dr. M. then moved the following resolutions:
Resolved, That the Medical Society of the District of Columbia have heard with deep emotion the annunciation of the death of their venerable President, Dr. Frederick May.

Will of Frederick May, of Washington City, D.C. (dtd. Jan. 21, 1847, probated March 9, 1847; Book 6, pp. 122-123, Box 19)

Funeral of the Late George May

The remains of the late George May, who died in the city of Paris about a month since, arrived in this city this morning, and were taken to the residence of his brother (Dr. May) on C street, where the funeral rites were performed today at 12 o'clock. The remains were embalmed and enclosed in a deep coffin covered with black cloth and trimmed with silver lace. The obsequies were of a peculiarly solemn character and were attended by numerous citizens of Washington as well as friends from abroad. The burial service of the Episcopal Church was performed by Rev. Dr. Butler, pastor of Trinity church, and the remains were taken to the Congressional cemetery, where they were solemnly interred. The deceased was a citizen of New Orleans, but had been travelling in Europe for some time.

Miss May -- the New American Soprano
Below the reader will find an extract from the Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia North American concerning the rising American cantatrice. Many of our fellow-citizens will remember her as Miss Juliana May, the daughter of our late fellow-citizens, Dr. George May, and the cousin of Dr. John Frederick May, the Hon. Henry May, and Col. Charles A. May, U.S.A. Her mother is the daughter of the late Theodore Lee, Esq., and the sister of Mrs. Joseph Gales of this city. Possessing a remarkable voice and figure, the latter giving evidence of a strong constitution, this talented and beautiful young lady has studied her profession much longer and more assiduously, under the best masters of Italy, than any other American. We have frequently heard of her eminent success and promise, from travellers on the continent, and have looked forward to hear of her brilliant debut with great interest indeed. We fear that it will be some years before she returns to the United States, as the Empressarios of Europe will hardly be apt to let such an operatic card as she turns out to be, slip through their fingers, if money can retain her in Europe.

An American cantatrice is rising on the musical horizon, and, to judge from present efforts, bids fair to shed abroad no faint light when she attains to her noonday attitude; or, in more appropriate language, to make her roulades and fioreture heard some day far and wide. Miss May is the name of this American swan, or nightingale, whichever appellation the lady most delights in -- a songstress not unknown, if I am rightly informed, to the musical world of Philadelphia, and now just returned with renewed inspiration from Italy.

The Evening Star, January 21, 1856
Miss Juliana May has completed her musical studies in Italy and will soon return to this country. She is said to have a powerful sweet and well-toned voice which has been most exquisitely cultivated.

_The New York Times, 1857_

Miss May's Concert

Miss Juliana May, an attractive American lady, who has recently returned from Europe, where she has been pursing a course of thorough musical instruction, made her debut here on Tuesday night, (Niblo's Saloon,) and was greeted by a fair audience. Miss May sang three solos and assisted in a couple of concerted pieces, thereby affording her hearers ample opportunity of forming a judgment of her probable powers. We say probable, for although Miss May seemed to be but slightly affected by the novelty of her situation, it is but reasonable to suppose that greater assurance of her public, will give her increased ease, and better nerve for delivering the many polished elegances of the musical art which may only be touched by the firmest hand. Miss May's voice has been trained with much success, and can fly to the higher regions with melodiousness and ease, but there is at present an apparent hardness in the immediately available compass of her voice. Its full vibratory quality and sonority have not yet been developed, and we are, therefore, justified in believing that, with practice, Miss May will greatly improve. A lack of animation—of musical electricity - we may also kindly refer to, as an evidence of recent routine which may well be dispensed with. Without any exhibition of great powers, we look on Miss May's debut as a success of which she may be proud, and as one which gives promise of future excellence. It is unnecessary to refer to the pieces in which she sang. They were of the usual concert pattern, and mostly from Verdi.

May. On yesterday morning at 4 o'clock, on the Capitol Hill, in this City, aged 29 years, Mrs. Julia M. May, the wife of Dr. Frederick May, to the great grief of her husband and numerous friends, to whom she was endeared, by every virtue which could adorn a wife, a daughter, and a mother. In all those relations she was exemplary in her conduct and deportment, but, to her numerous offspring, consisting of eight small children, her loss will be irreparable, to whom she was not only the most tender of parents, but the most discreet teacher and instructress, in those principles of piety and virtue, which would insure their future happiness and render them useful to society. It has been the will of God, that she should be called from the discharge of those precious duties to a better world, and the only consolation left for her friends is in patient submission to the divine will, and proclaiming, in humble resignation, "O Lord, thy will be done".

The funeral will take place this morning at 11 o'clock precisely, from the house of Dr. May, which the friends and acquaintances of the family are invited to attend.

Death of T.J. Mayer

Prominent Business Man Succumbs After Long Illness

His Demise Unexpected

Funeral to Occur at 11 O'clock A.M. Friday Next

Was Public-Spirited Citizen

Gave Liberally of His Means to Local Institutions and to Charity

The death of Theodore J. Mayer, member of the firm of W.M. Galt & Co. and one of the most prominent business men of the District, occurred at 10 o'clock last night at his home, 214 B street southeast, after an illness of about seven weeks. Although Mr. Mayer had been confined to his residence for a protracted interval, his death was totally unexpected, and the announcement of his passing away came as a shock to his numerous business associates and friends.

The funeral services will be held at the family residence at 11 o'clock a.m., Friday, and the friends of the deceased have been invited to be present. The interment will be private.

Mr. Mayer has been actively engaged in the work of upbuilding this city and increasing its prosperity since he came here in 1866. He usually took a leading part in philanthropic effort and was especially interested in the welfare of East Washington, in which his home was located. He was nearly sixty-one years of age. It is remarked that he retained his mental and physical vigor to a remarkable degree and until stricken by the ailment which ended in his death was an active man of affairs. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, a director of the Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital, and also a member of the directorate of the Central National Bank, the Union Trust Company and the George Washington University. For fifteen years he had been president of the Swiss Benevolent Association, and as such is said to have carried sunshine into many saddened homes."

Senior Member of Firm

Since the death of Mr. William M. Galt, January 3, 1889, the firm had been composed of Mr. Theodore J. Mayer, Mr Ralph L. Galt, the active members, and Mrs. Harriet T. Galt, widow of Wm. M. Galt. Ever since the death of Mr. W.M. Galt, Mr. Mayer had been the senior member of the firm. He was described as one of the self-made men of Washington.

Mr. Mayer was born in Geneva, Switzerland in April 1846 where he received his education in the public schools, followed by a collegiate course. He graduated in 1863. From that time until 1866 he was prominently connected with a large banking concern and commercial establishment at Fridrichshafen, Germany, first as correspondent and afterward as bookkeeper.

In June, 1866, he came to this country, his total capital, it is said, being $2 in gold. He came to Washington and for seven years filled the arduous position of clerk in a grocery store. His health finally broke down under the strain and he went to Europe to recuperate and regain his lost health.

Returning from the old world after a stay of four months he entered the establishment of Wm. Galt & Co. During his long connection with the company he was more particularly in charge of the flour department and was a widely recognized authority on all grades of flour and cereals.

Mr. Mayer married Miss Susannah Hitz, daughter of the late Florian Hitz, in September, 1876, the American centennial year. Mrs. Mayer died in 1880 and deceased never remarried. His son, Mr. Theodore Albert Mayer, who is in the real estate business survives him, in addition to a brother, who is a citizen of Ohio.

Liberal Contributions

Shortly before his death Mr. Mayer gave a practical illustration of the exemplification of his religion of humanity and charity by making certain munificent bequests. It is said he gave to the George Washington University extension and improvement funds upwards of $200,000 while $100,000 by his recent direction will be apportioned among the hospitals and charitable institutions of the District of Columbia.

One of the intimate friends of deceased today described his great interest and zeal in behalf of the George Washington University and his desire to see it become the greatest seat of learning in this country. It was added he studied the needs of the university for a long time and finally came to the decision that to erect the structures on the proposed 17th and B streets site would be a calamity to the city as well as to the university. He contended that as that site is on low territory and near the made ground of the Potomac flats considerable sickness would result among the students in the dormitories.

Plans Changed
This so impressed him, it is said, that, through his personal magnetism, earnestness and persistency, he induced the board of trustees of the university to change the plans as to the location of the institution. He offered the trustees, without cost to them, his site at Chevy Chase Circle as the nucleus for a building site. This place contains about four acres of ground and several buildings and is valued at about $168,000.

The trustees declined to accept the offer, as the tract of land was deemed to be too far from the city. The Dean property was then selected, and Mr. Mayer is said to have induced owners to take $800,000 for it, which sum is said to be far below its real value. Mr. Mayer also announced that if the trustees would decide upon the Dean property he would give them his Chevy Chase holdings to be sold and the proceeds to be applied to the extension fund.

Mr. Thomas W. Smith, an intimate friend and associate of the deceased, spoke today of Mr. Mayer's love for charitable work and especially for his interest in the Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital.

In addition to the $20,000 he donated to this institution in the first instance when it became necessary to procure a new building for its use, he recently gave to the management of the hospital a corner lot at 8th and D streets northeast, increasing his total contribution to that institution to about $30,000. It was his habit to visit the hospital nearly every day and take a personal interest in its management and welfare, and he was especially interested in beautifying the building and grounds with flowers, etc.

The deceased was regarded as a most loyal and lovable companion and was of such a happy and jolly disposition that he at once became the life of any company he might be in.

At the time the Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital was seeking new quarters Mr. Mayer gave the management of that institution valuable assistance, and when the present structure at 706 Massachusetts avenue northeast was secured he gave $20,000 toward the purchase money.

"These bequests of Mr. Mayer," said one of his friends today, "illustrate that he lived up to his creed, which is expressed in the immortal words of Ben Adan, 'Write me as one who loves my fellow-man.'"

Mr. Mayer was a member of the organization of spiritualists who believe in physical manifestations, it was said, and died in that faith. Some years ago he presented to that branch of spiritualists a modern building at the corner of 6th street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast for use by their society as national headquarters.

Strange Poisoning of a Child

Yesterday a daughter of John Mazzullo, a member of the marine band, took place from its father's home in East Washington. About three weeks ago the child was taken sick, and the physician decided that there were symptoms of the presence of some metallic substance in the stomach. Dr. J.F. May was called in and performed an operation by which was extracted a small brass or tinsel ornament of anchor ships, such as are used to decorate the ribbon bands on children's hats. The anchor was discolored, and there still remained in it the threads by which it had been sewed to the ribbon band, but nothing was known as to what time the child swallowed it, further than previous to being taken sick it was seen with the anchor in the mouth. The operation, however, failed to give relief, and the sufferer grew worse and worse until death ensued on Friday last.

Civil War Veteran and Long a Watchman at Treasury Department
Benjamin F. McAlwee, employed as watchman at the Treasury Department for the past thirty-five years, died yesterday at his home, 1122 I street southeast, following an illness of five months.  Funeral services will be held at his home Monday at 8:30 a.m.  High requiem mass will be said at St. Peter's Church.  Interment will be at Congressional cemetery.

Mr. McAlwee was eighty years old, and was a veteran of the Civil War, having been presented with the Congressional Medal for "most distinguished gallantry in action" in saving the lives of many of his comrades by picking up a bomb about to burst and casting it beyond the parapet of the trench where his company was lying.

As a young man he was an employee of the Navy Yard leaving the yard in 1861 to enlist in Company B, 1st District Volunteers.  When his three months was up he re-enlisted in Company D, 3d Maryland Volunteers and at the end of three years he again enlisted, serving until July, 1865.  He was awarded a furlough of twenty-five days by Gen. Meade for bravery.  He participated in twenty-seven engagements during the war.

Mr. McAlwee was born in this city in 1838.  He was a member of Rawlins Post, No. 1, G.A.R.; the Oldest Inhabitants' Association of the District of Columbia, and the Catholic Knights of America.  He is survived by his wife, a son and a daughter.

McArthur, Col. William E.

d. 29 Jul 1896

The Evening Star, July 30, 1896
Death of Col. McArthur

Col. W.E. McArthur, who has been a well-known man about Washington for a half dozen years past, was overcome by heat at the corner of New Jersey avenue and 1st street yesterday afternoon about 6 o'clock. He fell to the pavement, where he was found by the police and taken to the station house under the impression that he had been drinking. Police Surgeon Nevitt attended him, and said that while the colonel may have been drinking, it was certain that the heat had been too much for him.

The unfortunate man was taken at once to the Emergency Hospital, where the physicians did everything possible to restore him to consciousness. Their efforts were unsuccessful, and he died shortly after reaching the hospital. None of his friends knew what had happened, and the body was kept at the hospital all night.

Col. McArthur was the private secretary of Representative Herrmann of Oregon and the clerk of the committee on navigation and arid lands. He came to this city about eight years ago from Oregon, where he was formerly in the newspaper business at The Dalles. He was a brother of Judge J.B. McArthur of Spokane, one of the leading citizens of the state of Washington. Col. McArthur was unmarried and about 56 years of age. He formerly boarded at 218 New Jersey avenue, but for the past fortnight had roomed in the Maltby building. This morning the body was taken to a local undertaker to be prepared for burial.

The Evening Star, August 3, 1896
Col. Wm. E. McArthur Buried

There was a large attendance at the funeral of the late Col. Wm. E. McArthur, which took place yesterday afternoon from 1914 16th street. There were many floral offerings, including a wreath of lilies and roses sent by the friends of the deceased in the Senate. The pallbearers were ex-Congressman Levi P. Malsh, Col. Andrew James and Messrs. A.J. LeBreton, John Irwin, Harry Gilfry, J.D. O'Connor and William Blackford. The remains were buried in Congressional cemetery next to the monument over the grave of Capt. William E. McArthur, the father of the dead man, who was a distinguished naval officer.

Before Mr. Taylor built his home there were two one-story frame buildings, on the lot adjoining, which were owned by Mr. Robert Beale,

... One of these buildings was occupied by Mr. Andrew McCalla (son of General John M. McCalla) who died many years ago. His brother, the late Dr. John M. McCalla, who died here in April, 1897, will be remembered during more recent years. His widow, daughter of the late Silas P. Hill, is still a resident of this city.

John M. McCalla was born near Lexington, Ky., in 1793 and became a resident of this city in 1845, at which time he purchased the property (now numbered 330 Indiana Avenue) from Mrs. Joseph Wood, the wife of a prominent artist, for whom it was built in 1833. This continued to be his home until his death in 1873, with exception of seven years (1848 to 1855) a portion of which time it was rented to a Rev. Mr. Cushman, who conducted a ladies' school there.

When war with England was declared in 1812, Mr. McCalla, then but nineteen years old, was among the first to respond to the call for troops. He soon rose to the rank of adjutant and afterwards obtained the rank of brigadier general. In the report made by the commanding general of the actions of January 18 and January 22, 1813, he was named among those who had distinguished themselves in those battles. During his early life in this city Mr. McCalla was second auditor under the Polk administration, but after that time his profession was that of lawyer and claim agent. His son, Dr. J.M. McCalla, who had been a resident of Washington for fifty years at the time of his death, above mentioned, graduated in medicine, after a course at Columbia College, now known as Columbian University, but owing to ill health he was obliged to discontinue practice of his profession. His sister, Miss Maria F. McCalla, is still a resident of this city.

Death of Mr. F.A. Macartney

The Evening Star, July 19, 1871

With regret we announce the death of Mr. F.A. Macartney, late disbursing clerk and superintendent of the Post Office Department, which occurred at his residence, in this city, last evening. Mr. Macartney was in the 43d year of his age. He was a man of education and cultivation, a good writer, and filled editorial positions on the Intelligencer, Chronicle, and Express, in this city, with no little credit. In 1869 he was appointed disbursing officer of the Post Office Department by Postmaster General Creswell, and held the position until a few weeks ago when his removal to the Insane Asylum excited much sympathy for himself and family in this community. For the last year or two Mr. Macartney was in bad health, suffering from some bronchial affection, and was scarcely able to speak above a whisper, and when they ascertained at the Asylum that there was no hope of his recovery he was brought back to his house and died there. Mr. Macartney had many friends who will mourn his death, and the bereaved family have the sympathy of our entire community.

The Evening Star, July 21, 1871

The funeral of the late F.A. McCartney took place from the residence of his family, on Q street, this morning, and was very numerously attended. Rev. Dr. A.E. Gibson, of the Foundry M.E. Church, was the officiating minister, and the following named gentlemen were pall bearers: Hon. John A.J. Creswell, Wm. Mitchell, T.H. Parsons, N.W. Burchell, C.B. Young, and Thos. P. Morgan. The remains in a rosewood casket, were placed in a hearse and followed by a number of carriages in which were seated numerous personal friends of the deceased, including several officials of the Post Office Department, were conveyed to Congressional Cemetery where they were interred beside those of the child of the deceased which was buried on Monday last.

The funeral of Donald McCathran, a lifelong resident of the District, whose death occurred yesterday at his home, 513 10th street southeast, will take place at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, Anacostia Lodge, F.A.A.M., conducting the services.

Donald McCathran was born in Southeast Washington in 1835 and has had his home in that part of town nearly all his life. Until the institution of the present form of the District government Mr. McCathran was active in politics. At one time he was a member of the city council.

He was also closely identified for many years with the District Militia and was one of the organizers of the old Washington Life Guards immediately before the outbreak of the civil war. The Green Mountain Boys was another of the older military organizations with which he was connected, being one of its captains at a time when the organization was noted in eastern militia circles.

At the outbreak of the civil war Mr. McCathran enlisted in one of the District regiments and served in the field for several months when he was appointed drill master of the Potomac flotilla, remaining with that command until after the surrender of Gen. Lee.

For a short time after the close of the war he was a contractor and served the District government in the assessor's office. In recent years he was employed at the government printing office.

Mr. McCathran was connected with Anacostia Lodge, F.A.A.M.; Farragut Post, G.A.R., and the Royal Arcanum. He is survived by two sons and one daughter, W.R. McCathran, W.A. McCathran and Mrs. F.R. Williams, all of this city.

Capt. McCathran Ill
Attacked by Vertigo Soon After Reaching His Office

Soon after reaching the fifth precinct station house this morning for the day's duties Capt. McCathran of the fifth precinct suffered another attack of vertigo similar to that which he had several months ago. He was removed to his home in a stretcher in the patrol wagon of the fifth precinct, and was attended by Dr. Edmund Barry, police surgeon. The latter stated that wile the attack was serious he did not think it would be fatal.

Capt. McCathran has not been feeling as well as usual for the past few days and Dr. Barry has been called in several times. This morning, however, he felt able to attend to his police duties and left his home, 511 10th street southeast, about 7:30 o'clock. Upon reaching the station he greeted the men there and stepped into his office, but soon after called for help and fell to the floor. William Dyer, night station clerk, and Lieut.
Anderson heard the calls and responded quickly. They found the captain on the floor of his office suffering severely. He was quickly transferred to a bed and Dr. Barry was called.

It is the theory of the physician that the extra exertion required to walk on the streets, through the snow, is accountable for the attack which Capt. McCathran suffered.

The Evening Star, February 26, 1907, p. 3
Condition Is Grave
Capt. McCathran of Police Department Very Seriously Ill
Grave fears are entertained for Capt. F.F. McCathran of the fifth precinct, as the result of the second attack of vertigo which he suffered in his office in the station house yesterday morning, as stated in The Star. Although he was unconscious for some time after the attack, he partially recovered yesterday afternoon, and has been resting comfortably since that time. The attack seems to have robbed him of his powers of speech. Whenever friends or members of his family approach him he smiles a recognition, but seems unable to say anything.

The attack has affected Capt. McCathran's right side. Dr. Barry, the police surgeon, is attending him.

When the news of Capt. McCathran's illness became known in police circles yesterday there was a general expression of regret, and many messages of inquiry were sent to the fifth precinct station.

The Evening Star, March 11, 1907, p. 2
Condition Is Critical
Capt. McCathran of Police Department Near Death's Door
Capt. Francis F. McCathran, commander of the fifth police precinct, is in a critical condition. Reports received at police headquarters from his home, 511 10th street southeast, this afternoon indicated that the veteran policeman has but a few hours to live. His present illness followed a cerebral hemorrhage which he suffered last fall, a second attack occurring about two weeks ago. Mrs. McCathran and her five children have been at the bedside of the patient for more than twenty-four hours, expecting each moment would be his last.

Tribute to the Dead
Official Order Issued Announcing Capt. McCathran's Decease
In an order issued today by Maj. Sylvester, the announcement of the death of Capt. Francis F. McCathran is made, with an expression of profound sorrow. The order reads:

"Throughout his thirty-eight years service in the police department he was held in high esteem by his associates and had the confidence of the public. He was modest, intelligent and courageous, and his career was marked by many acts of kindness as well as firm devotion to official duty."

"Aside from embodying the many good qualities which characterize a fair-minded officer and reputable citizen, he enjoyed the further distinction of having rendered his country service during the civil war."

It is ordered that Inspector Cross and Acting Capt., Anderson are to have charge of the detail to escort the remains to the cemetery.

Capt. McCathran Dead
Police Officer Succumbs to Cerebral Hemorrhage
Had Been Ill Since Last Fall, Ailment Resulting in Paralysis -- Native of Washington
Capt. Francis F. McCathran, who was one of the oldest members of the police force, died at his home, 511 10th street southeast at 2 o'clock a.m. today. His death was due to a cerebral hemorrhage. Last fall Capt. McCathran suffered a hemorrhage while passing along 7th street southeast, in front of the Eastern market, and had to be removed to his home. It was thought at that time he could not recover, but he rallied and was afterward able to return to duty. Shortly after he was able to be about he suffered a second slight attack, and two weeks ago he suffered another attack, paralysis resulting, and his condition became such that physicians were unable at any time to offer his family any hope for his recovery.

Funeral Arrangements
Arrangements have been made for the funeral to take place at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon from the family home. Th eRev. E.H. Lamar, pastor of the Wilson Memorial Church, will officiate and the interment will be at Congressional cemetery. The pall bearers are to be selected from the three branches of the Masonic order with which the deceased had been connected, and a detail of members of the police force will accompany the body to the cemetery. Maj. Sylvester, superintendent of police, issued a general order this afternoon announcing the death of Capt. McCathran and directing that the detail be made to escort the body to the cemetery.

Born In This City

Capt. McCathran was born in this city the 19th of February 1841, his parents occupying the house adjoining the family home on 10th street at the time of his birth. He learned the blacksmith trade and opened a shop at Upper Marlboro, Md., before the breaking out of the war. His Maryland neighbors did not prove congenial at that time, and he returned to the city in time to respond to President Lincoln's call for volunteers. At the close of three months of service he received an appointment in the navy yard, remaining there until May 21, 1868, when he accepted a position on the police force. Eight years after he received the appointment as a private on the force he received a promotion, and in 1891 he was advanced to the rank of lieutenant and placed in charge of a precinct. In 1892 he was transferred from the fifth precinct to headquarters, succeeding Inspector Swindelis as chief of the detective bureau. Although this transfer was in the nature of a promotion, McCathran did not seek it, nor did he want it, and he was elated when he was subsequently returned to the fifth precinct, where he had done duty for so many years.

During most of the time he served as a member of the police force he was stationed in the fifth precinct. He served as lieutenant of the ninth precinct for a short time, and he also did duty in the first and seventh precincts. For several years he was a mounted sergeant in Anacostia, and his beat extended throughout the territory east of the city. He became well acquainted with the residents of that part of the county and made a host of friends there. When he was placed in charge of the fifth precinct he retained that part of the county within the confines of his precinct, and seldom a week passed that he did not drive over the roads and see his old friends.

Wife and Five Children Survive

Capt. McCathran was a son of the late James R. McCathran, who was a foreman in the navy yard for a great many years. In 1862 Capt. McCathran and Miss Elizabeth Kelley were married, and his wife and five children survive him. The children are James K., William D. and Frank B. McCathran, Mrs. Effie F. Kendrick and Miss Bessie McCathran.

The deceased was a member of Washington Commandery, K.T.; Naval Chapter, R.A.M.; Naval Lodge, F.A.A.M., and of Martha Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. He was also a member of Farragut Post, No. 10, G.A.R., and was a communicant at Wilson Memorial M.E. Church. He was a member of the Order of the Golden Cross.

Maj. Sylvester said today that many persons had been to see him regarding the selection of the successor to Capt. McCathran, some calling before the death occurred. Such haste, he said, he considered very much out of place. He says he has determined upon the successor and that at the appropriate time he will announce the changes that are to be made.

Funeral of Capt. McCathran

Remains of Police Official Interred This Afternoon

Many friends of the late Capt. McCathran, who was in command of the fifth precinct police station for a number of years, attended the funeral, from his late residence, 211 10th street southeast, at 2 o'clock this afternoon. Major Sylvester, Inspector Cross, Acting Capt. Anderson and other officials of the police department were among those present. Numerous floral tributes gave evidence of the high esteem in which Capt. McCathran was held by his associates and others.

The ceremonies were conducted by Rev. E.H. Lamar, pastor of Wilson Memorial Church. Representatives of the various organizations with which the deceased had been connected were in attendance. They included Washington Commandery, K.T.; Naval Chapter, R.A.M.; Naval Lodge, F.A.A.M.; Martha Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star; Farragut Post, G.A.R., and the Order of the Golden Cross. Upon conclusion of the services at the house the remains were escorted to Congressional cemetery by a detail of policemen, where members of the orders with which the deceased had been connected had charge of the ceremonies.

Sad Case of Drowning
Yesterday M. Joseph Weaver and son, Wm. McCathran and J. Miller, in a sail boat, visited Alexandria to look at the ruins of the late fire. About 6 o'clock p.m. they had nearly reached the wharf, near the Navy Yard bridge, on their return, when by some means the boat capsized. Mr. Miller at once swam ashore, but the others were caught beneath the boat and sails. Mr. John D. Brandt and Frank Cole, who were in a boat near by, at once went to their rescue and saved the lives of Mr. Weaver and his son, but at the time could not find McCathran. The body was soon afterwards recovered, however, and efforts were made to resusitate it, but they were unsuccessful. The remains were taken to the residence of his parents, at the corner of 8th and B streets, S.E. He was a young man, about 22 years old, with many good traits of character, and was employed as a clerk in the store of P.P. Little & Co.

The McCauley Estate

Rule Issued Against Executor on Widow's Application

Upon the petition of Catharine V. McCauley, widow of Theodore F. McCauley, filed today through Attorney A.A. Birney, Judge Hagner issued a rule against Henry C. McCauley, executor of the said decedent's estate, ordering him to show cause December 11 why the letters testamentary heretofore issued to him should not be revoked and canceled.

In her petition Mrs. McCauley says that the said executor has willfully concealed from her and her children all knowledge of a certain letter which the said executor recently filed for probate, more than eighteen months after the death of her husband.

Mrs. McCauley also says that it appears from the sworn testimony of the said Henry C. McCauley and of other witnesses in equity cause 17525 that he willfully deceived her in the knowledge of the estate and communicated to her false information and endeavored to mislead her as to the assets of the estate, and to defraud her of her rights therein.

Further, says Mrs. McCauley, it appears from the testimony taken in the said equity cause that the said Henry C. McCauley has combined and colluded with other persons, and particularly with one Wm. H. Speiser, to prevent a part of the assets of the estate from being realized, and to enable the said Speiser to hold the same in fraud of her rights and of those of the legatees under the said will. She also charges that the said Henry C. McCauley has not exhibited just and honest accounts as executor.

What Mr. H.C. McCauley Says Regarding the Matter

Mr. H.C. McCauley said today to a Star reporter in regard to the petition filed by Catharine V. McCauley to have him removed as executor of the estate of Theo. F. McCauley: "Your account of the petition filed by Catherine V. McCauley, my brother's widow, states that I am charged in it with concealing from her a private letter from my brother to me, which I have recently offered for probate. I obeyed my brother's request embodied in the letter, and nothing more. This letter contained instructions to me that I should invest the money received from the sale of his store for the sole benefit of his five minor children. This I endeavored to accomplish according to his request; hence this suit. The court will have to decide as to whom the money belongs, the widow or the children. That I attempted to mislead her as to the assets of the estate is disproved by the fact that she and ten of the heirs were fully informed by my brother as to the contents of his will and the sale of his store to Speiser before he left for Europe, where he died. My accounts as executor and as guardian have been filed, and every dollar received by me properly accounted for as the records of the Orphans' Court will show. Indeed, my overpayments amount to several hundred dollars."

Death Investigated
Jury's Verdict in the Case of William McCauley
Conclusion Reached That the Workhouse Guards Exercised Unwarranted Responsibility
Six men composing the coroner's jury in the case of William W. McCauley, the workhouse prisoner who died at the Washington Asylum Hospital Friday morning, as stated in Friday's Star, heard the testimony of a number of witnesses today and reached the conclusion that the victim was not given proper treatment at the workhouse. It was in evidence that the fracture and depression of the skull caused injuries which were necessarily fatal. It was also in evidence that he had the first fit at 6 o'clock in the evening, and was permitted to remain on his cot in the cell until 7 o'clock the next morning before he was removed to the hospital. It was some time after he reached the hospital that the operation was performed, and his death occurred on the operating table.

The inquest was held by direction of Commissioner West, who has immediate charge of the workhouse and Washington Asylum Hospital. His attention had been called to the death of McCauley, and the circumstances, he thought, were such that an investigation should be held in order to determine if there had been any negligence on the part of those in charge of the prisoner, and the coroner accordingly took up the case. It is likely, however, that another investigation will follow. This will probably be conducted by the board of charities.

As heretofore stated, McCauley was arrested in South Washington last Wednesday, and was committed to the workhouse the next day. He was a victim of intemperance, and was under the influence of liquor when Policeman Leach arrested him just after he had frightened his wife by threatening to use a pair of scissors upon her. Some time during Thursday afternoon he reached the workhouse and was assigned to cell 2 with two other prisoners. He had a fit about 6 o'clock in the evening in the presence of two of the workhouse employees. One of them, Overseer Brown, gave him some salt and an application of cold water.

The Overseer's Instructions
According to the testimony given by witnesses, the overseer told the prisoners to repeat the treatment in the event that McCauley had another fit. The patient did not regain consciousness, the witnesses stated, but no doctor was called. He suffered three more fits during the night, and the prisoners in the cell with him treated him as they had been told. When he had the first fit he fell heavily to the floor and received the injuries which caused his death.

The inquest was held at the sixth precinct police station. In reporting upon the case the jurors recited the circumstances attending the man's death, and concluded: "We further believe that the guard in charge of the prisoners at the time exercised unwarranted responsibility in not notifying the physicians immediately."

Overseer Brown's Statement
An important witness in the investigation was M.J. Brown, an overseer at the workhouse. He testified that he first saw McCauley about 6 o'clock Thursday evening, when he was lying on the floor of his cell in a fit. Witness put a pillow under the prisoner's head. He got some salt and assisted in bathing the sick man's head.
"When he got out of the fit I put him on the cot," said witness.

"What do you mean by getting out of it?" the coroner asked.

"When he stopped working and twitching."

"Did the man open his eyes?"

"A little."

The overseer said he treated McCauley the same as he treated others who have fits. The next morning, he said, he thought the sick man needed hospital treatment, and Mr. Stoutenburgh called at the cell with the doctor. Witness said he sends for the physician in serious cases, but in ordinary drunken fits he treats them as he did McCauley. When the doctors are called, he stated, they usually make prompt responses.

Screamed and Fell to the Floor

Thomas Henderson and Thomas Hart, prisoners confined in the cell with McCauley, were also examined. They said that McCauley was rolling a cigarette when he suddenly lifted his hands, screamed and fell heavily to the floor. Henderson said he told Overseer Brown of the man's condition, and emphasized the statement that his fall had been a heavy one.

The sick man's treatment, one witness said, consisted of his being given salt and his temples bathed with cold water.

"Did he come to after he had been treated?"

"No, sir," Henderson replied.

"Did he open his eyes?"

"Only once."

During the night, he said, McCauley had three fits, and he followed the overseer's directions concerning the treatment. He said it was impossible to arouse McCauley.

Witness Hart gave similar testimony,

Policeman's Story of Arrest

Policeman Leach and ex-Policeman Posey told of the circumstances attending McCauley's arrest. They said that the man was intoxicated, and complaint was made that he had driven his wife from home with a pair of scissors. It was stated that McCauley did not appear to know what he was doing.

Two brothers of the deceased said they knew the latter had had one fit before the time of his last arrest.

Thomas J. Leach, a watchman at the workhouse, told of his connection with the affair. When he was called to the cell, he said, he reported the man's illness to his superior officer, Brown, and went away.

Dr. D. Percy Hickling, visiting physician to the Washington Asylum, testified that the injury received by McCauley was necessarily fatal.

Deputy Coroner Glazebrook informed the jury that McCauley's death was due to a fracture of the skull and hemorrhage.

The Washingtonian, July 1990
Not Even Death Stilled The Laughter
That Filled Maureen McCormack's Life
By Diana McLellan

Maureen McCormack, the bartender who got AIDS from a 1981 blood transfusion, laughed her big laugh and talked about her past and future for last December's Washingtonian.

"I've realigned my priorities," she said then. "I don't get upset over small stuff or waste my time on stupid things. I take walks and really enjoy things, the light, the trees..." By then, an infection had blinded one eye, and was blinding the other, and a lymphoma tumor was growing in her brain. Chemotherapy seemed to help, but worsened the distress of yet another infection that had slipped through her shattered immune system.

Shortly after we talked last winter, Maureen moved from her hospital back into her beloved little apartment in Georgetown, then into the hospital again, and then back home. A visitor found her cheerful, conversational, joking about figuring out the fingering on a small take deck someone had given her. A nurse came daily to tend and feed her; friends visited; and one of her seven siblings would come over each evening to spend the night. She talked on the phone and listened to talk radio.

But the lymphoma was growing. The brain seizures became more frequent and more frightening. Eventually, she was blind.

So finally Maureen, who had left home -- "gone over the wall," as she said -- at sixteen, moved back into the Capitol Hill home of her mother, Mavis. There, nurses continued to visit and the siblings to rally around. Mavis, the matriarch, worked, worried, bustled, cheer-led, and cooked. She told the family that she was determined that Maureen should die "at home" because it was the fitting thing to do.

But Maureen became weaker and her seizures worse, Mavis more exhausted and fragile. In early May, Maureen's physician, Dr. Carole Horn, convinced the family to put her into the Hospice of Washington, if only for a two-week respite.

There, her seizures could be attended to. There, too, her pain --- which had become savage --- was relieved by hourly doses of morphine from the round-the-clock staff, which more than one volunteer describes as "saintly." There, too, she could be encouraged to eat (if only for pleasure), to ready herself for the end, and, when she was ready, to "give herself permission" to die.

About the time the two weeks were up, on the evening of May 23, Maureen lay in her pretty pastel-painted room at the hospice. Her lucid intervals were separated by sleep. But she was comfortable, and, as a volunteer remarked, "She was still beautiful. She still had her humor." Her younger brother Patrick was visiting that evening. He joked about missing the ball game as he rubbed her arms affectionately. She was smiling.

"It's okay," Patrick told her softly, after a while. "You can go to sleep now."

And so she died, smiling.

She had had time to plan her funeral in detail.

Nobody, though, could have planned the mourners: St. Peter's Church on Capitol Hill was filled to capacity. There were Hill people, bar people, business people, show-biz people, journalists, comics, pols. They ranged from 350-pound bartender Baseball Bill to Washington Times editor Arnaud de Borchgrave. Maureen's 21-year-old daughter, Kelly, read a poem she'd written for her mother. Brother Robbie told of how she'd beaten him at bowling after going blind. Each sibling said a few sad or funny words: some broke down; the old church echoed with an "Ave Maria" of surpassing sweetness.

After the faithful took communion, friends filing out were given blue or white balloons. They bobbed from the windows of the funeral cortège as it wound its way to Congressional Cemetery. After a graveside prayer, the balloons were released into the May sky -- a moving moment that, as Maureen had planned, lightened hearts for the cheerful, beery, Maureen-style party a St. Peter's afterward. There, she had planned a program of danceable music, including her favorite, "That's What Friends Are For." Everyone who knew the words sang along.
On the drive back to the church, one of the long, grand, black funeral limousines eased slightly ahead of a smaller car. From a crack in its rear right window, a hand signaled. As the cars drew abreast, the limo's window slid down. There was the puckish pink face of Maureen's brother, Patrick McCormack.

"Excuse me," he said, "Do you have any Grey Poupon?"

Maureen would have laughed and laughed.

<td>Life's little stage is a small eminence, Inch high the grave above—that home of man, Where dwells the multitude; we gaze around; We read their monuments; we sigh; and while We sigh, we sink, and are what we deplor'd, Lamenting, or lamented, all our lot.</td>

What a leveller is death! The high and the low the illustrious and the obscure, alike find repose in the bosom of their parent earth. All the conflicts of ambition, the agitations of passion; and the bitterness of hatred, are hushed forever in the cold embrace of death.

How lov'd, how valued o??, avail thee not, To whom related, or by whom begot; A heap of dust alone remains of thee; 'Tis all Thou art, and all the Proud shall be."

The loftiest elevation or the lowliest obscurity cannot shelter us from the unerring shaft of the insatiate archer. The decree has gone forth—"Man is dust, and to dust he must return." The helplessness of infancy, the vigor of manhood, and the decrepitude of age, alike sink under the inevitable stroke of the fell destroyer, and all are hastening to commingle their dust with the kindred element which is to cover and surround them.

"To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty space from day to day, Till the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted man The way to dusty death."

These reflections have been suggested by the death of an old and venerable friend, whose body I followed to the grave a few days ago. He was among the oldest citizens of Washington, of which he had been a resident for forty-five years. How few who came hero then, now remain! The graveyards of our city have become populous with those who existed since, and their very memories have sunk into oblivion, and have gone "Glimmering through the dream of things that were."

A few of his early pupils, now old men, followed, like myself, his remains to the tomb. What a world of reminiscences must the contemplation of his inanimate body have called up? How melancholy and solemn must have been the contrast between the memory of the past, when, in the joyousness and buoyancy of youth, they received instruction from his lips, and the sad and sombre reality of the present, when he who had once been "Their guide, philosopher, and friend," who had first taught their youthful minds to thin, and to whom they had looked up with veneration and love, was now, after the lapse of near half a century, reposing in "cold oblivion" before them.

Mr. A.T. McCormick was a native of Ireland, and came to this city in the year 1795-6. He was among the first to open a classical school, and the very first to establish an Episcopal church in Washington. The building had been a barn, on the land of Mr. D. Carroll, one of the original proprietors of the city, and, by the individual and unaided exertions of this worthy and pious man, it was converted into an humble but decent temple of Christian worship. The illustrious Jefferson was wont to attend Divine service in this lowly chapel. He usually rode alone on horseback; his pew was handsomely cushioned, and his prayer-book was a French translation. Mr. Jefferson was much pleased with Mr. McCormick's reading, which he thought excellent. In this humble church he officiated till a larger and more commodious one of brick was erected near the Navy Yard in 1807, and continued its pastor till 1823, when he retired from its pastoral duties. Though unambitious of distinction, he endeavored to render himself useful to his fellow-beings and to society. He was appointed several years ago by the Board of Trustees of the Eastern Free School, established by the Corporation of Washington, their President, and acted in that capacity till the period of his death, to the satisfaction of the trustees and the Corporation. Mr. McCormick was a good classical scholar, of great simplicity of heart, kind, unoffending, and gentle, and a man like the brother of Goldsmith, whose "Very failings leaned to Virgue's side"

Domestic in his habits and pious in his feelings, he was respected by all who knew him, and died, as he had lived, without an enemy.

He rests by the side of the body of the beloved and venerated Harrison, whose funeral he attended but a few short weeks before. They sleep together in peace, the exalted and the humble, and both alike "In trembling hope repose The bosom of their Father and their God."

Woman Ends Her Life
Mrs. Nina McCormick Inhales Illuminating Gas
Mrs. Nina McCormick, fifty-five years of age, committed suicide last night or this morning at her home, 931 P street by inhaling illuminating gas. Friends of the deceased told the police this morning that the act was the result of illness and worry. Mrs. McCormick was a widow, and occupied a room in the apartment of her married brother. She had frequently said she did not like the idea of being dependent on anybody for support, the police were told, and recently she suffered an attack of nervous prostration. She had about recovered, but was still worried.

Mrs. McCormick last evening was about the house as usual, conversing with Mrs. Miller, from whom the McCormicks rent an apartment, and with others. About 10 o'clock she went to her room. Mrs. Miller this morning about 5 o'clock was awakened by the odor of gas, and started an investigation. She soon discovered that the gas was flowing from the jets in the room occupied by Mrs. McCormick. Mrs. Miller aroused other persons and proceeded to effect an entrance to the room from which the gas was flowing. The door was found so securely fastened that it was necessary to have some one climb in through a window.

It was found that the gas was flowing from two jets. The flow was cut off and the window and door opened. A hasty examination satisfied those in the house that Mrs. McCormick was dead, but in order that no mistake might be made a call was sent to the Emergency Hospital. The ambulance with one of the surgeons responded. The surgeon examined the body and promptly announced that life was extinct. His opinion is the gas had been turned on before midnight.

Coroner Nevitt made an investigation of the affair and gave the necessary certificate. Later the body was prepared for burial. The funeral will probably take place Monday.
Coroner Nevitt heard the statements of Mrs. Miller and of relatives of the deceased before he reached the conclusion that Mrs. McCormick had committed suicide. The coroner was told that Mrs. McCormick became suddenly blind about eighteen months ago, and that she had since experienced periods of mental depression.

Col. Joseph S. McCoy Dies at His Home Here
Prominent Member of Masonic Order in District and Veteran of Civil War
Col. Joseph S. McCoy, dean both of the past grand masters of the Grand Lodge of Masons of the District of Columbia and of the past grand high priests of Royal Arch Masons, died at his home, 423 B street northeast, yesterday morning, at 10:30 o'clock. Arrangements for his funeral have not been completed.

Col. McCoy was grand master of Masons in 1880, and he was grand high priest of the Grand Chapter, Royal Arch Masons in 1878. He was born near New Rochelle, N.Y., November 18, 1839, and was therefore seventy-seven years old the day preceding his death. His early years were spent in New York city, where he attended the public schools and St. John's College. At the close of his sophomore year he was obliged to seek employment, and for a time was with the Methodist Book Concern, later teaching school until he went to Montgomery, Ala., in 1860. The sentiment at the time against northern men forced his return to New York.

Enlists in U.S. Army
He enlisted in Company B, 2d United States Cavalry, which was stationed at Camp Colorado, Tex., until 1861, when his regiment was ordered first to New York and then to Washington. He participated in the first battle of Bull Run and the battles of Williamsburg, Gaines Mill, Savage Station, Nelson's Farm, Glendale and Malvern Hill, when he was wounded. Discharged from the army April 1, 1863, he accepted a position in the office of the adjutant general, at the War Department, and continued in service in that department until his death.

He was made a master Mason in Lafayette Lodge, No. 19, F.A.A.M., of this city, March 11, 1867, and was master of the lodge in 1873 and 1874. He was grand lecturer of the Grand Lodge in 1876 and became grand master in 1880.

He became a Royal Arch Mason in Mount Vernon Chapter, No. 20, of Maryland and the District of Columbia, now Mount Vernon Chapter, No. 3, of the District of Columbia, April 22, 1867, receiving also the degrees of royal and select master and of superexcellent master, which were then conferred in the Royal Arch Chapter.

Charter Member of Chapter
May 27, 1867, he became a charter member of Lafayette Chapter, No. 5, and was its high priest in 1874-5. He was grand lecturer of the Grand Chapter in 1874-5 and became grand high priest in 1878. He was master of Lafayette Council, Royal and Select Masters, now extinct, from 1875 to 1883 and charter master of Washington Council from 1888 to 1890. He was knighted in Columbia Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar.

Until his health began to fail some years ago, Col. McCoy was regarded as an indefatigable Masonic worker and he possessed intellectual and personal qualities that won for him a host of friends in and out of the fraternity. His wife died several years ago.

Harper, Kenton N., History of the Grand Lodge, 1911
p. 363-366: Grand Master 1880

The subject of this sketch has to his credit more than three decades of active and valuable work for the benefit of the Fraternity. Possessed of an unusual intellectual equipment he has also ever been an indefatigable worker, and these qualities, united with a magnetic and pleasing personality, a courteous demeanor, a genius for executive work, and an exceptional ability as a convincing speaker, gave to the administration of the many offices to which he has been called a rare degree of success. His autobiography, amended only to the extent of several additions his modesty ignored, is of such interest that it is here quoted in extenso:

"I was born on a farm, some five miles back of the present town of New Rochelle, Westchester Co., New York, on Monday, November 18, 1839. My parents removed to New York City in 1844, and when seven years of age I entered the public schools of that city. In September 1854, I was promoted to the grammar class, and graduated therefrom in June 1855. Subsequently, I entered St. John's College, N.Y., and in June 1857 concluded my sophomore year. By reason, however, of the financial panic of that year, I entered the service of the Methodist Book Concern, the located in New York City, where I remained until September 1857, when I secured a school. I taught school from September 1857 until June 1860, when I was offered a more advantageous position to teach at Montgomery, Ala. I sailed from New York in July 1860 with the purpose of accepting the position. On arriving at Savannah, Ga., I proceeded by rail to Montgomery, but on arriving there I found that sentiment was such, at that time, that I returned to New York.

"Being desirous of trying my fortune on the Pacific Coast, and with that object in view, there being a regiment of cavalry there at the time to which I was assured I would be assigned, I enlisted in the regular army for the cavalry service, on the 27th of August, 1860. Instead of being assigned to the Department of the Pacific, I was assigned to the Department of Texas, commanded by Maj. Gen. David E. Twiggs. I was assigned to Company B, 2d U.S. Cavalry, the officers of which were Edmund Kirby Smith, Captain; Walter H. Jenifer, 1st Lieut.; and Fitzhugh Lee, 2d Lieut. The field officers of the regiment were Albert Signey Johnson, Colonel; Robert E. Lee, Lieut. Col.; George H. Thomas, Senior Major, and Earl Van Dorn, Junior Major. The regiment, rank and file, was considered the best and its officers the ablest in the service. For a time I was much disappointed with my assignment, but in a short time, owing to the consideration shown me by both officers and men, I became fully reconciled with it.

"My company was stationed at Camp Colorado, Coleman Co., Texas, and during the time I was there, with drill, and reading the northern papers and magazines a month old, time passed pleasantly. We learned of the election of President Lincoln a few days before Christmas 1860, and subsequently that the Southern States had, or would soon secede from the Union. Rumor was abroad, but it was not until the military forces were surrendered by Maj. Gen. Twiggs, commanding the Department of Texas, that we realized our condition. By reason of the influence of our officers and the fact that the paroling officer of the State was our own Major (Van Dorn), who had resigned from the army, my regiment alone of all the troops stationed in Texas, was not 'captured and paroled.'

"My company left Camp Colorado in February 1861 and proceeded to San Antonio, thence to Indianola, where we embarked, leaving only our horses and horse equipment with the State authorities, and proceeded, via Key West and Havana, for New York, where arrived early in April 1861. Maj. Geo. H. Thomas was at the wharf to receive us. That afternoon we left for Carlisle, Pa., where we obtained our remounts and on May 2, 1861, proceeded to Washington, D.C., where we arrived May 5, 1861.

"On the night of May 31-June 1, 1861, under instructions from Lieut. Gen. Winfield Scott, my company made a raid on Fairfax, C.H. We lost four or five men and some horses, and regained our camp near Falls Church, Va., on the morning of June 1, 1861. On July 18, 1861, my Division (the First), Army of Northeastern Virginia, made a reconnaissance along the Confederate lines at Bull Run, and was with General..."
Tyler, its commander during the engagement. On the 19th of July, 1861 I was one of General Barnard's escort, in his observations of the several fords along the line of Bull Run. I participated in the Battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861, and my company formed a part of the rear guard, at Centerville and Fairfax Court House, during the retreat of the Federal Army from the battlefield.

"I also participated in the battles of Williamsburg, Gaines' Mill, Savage Station, Nelson's Farm, Glendale, and Malvern Hill, during the Peninsular Campaign. I was wounded in the latter engagement. Subsequently to my discharge from the army on April 1, 1863, to accept an appointment in the office of the Adjutant-General of the Army, I served in Company A, War Department Rifles, from June 1864 until June 1865, my commissions being signed by Assistant Secretary of War Tucker.

"During my service in the army I held the following grades: recruit, private, corporal, duty sergeant, orderly sergeant, second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain, Assistant Adjutant-General of Volunteers.

"I received the Master Mason's degree in LaFayette Lodge, No., 19, March 11, 1867; the Royal Arch degree in Mt. Vernon Chapter, No. 20, April 22, 1867, including the Royal, Select and Super Excellent Master's degrees, which were conferred in the Chapters of this jurisdiction in those early days. I was Master of LaFayette Lodge, No. 19, 1873-74, and after filling several of the subordinate chairs was Grand Master for the year 1880; was High Priest of LaFayette R.A. Chapter, No. 5, during the years 1874 and 1875, and Grand High Priest of this jurisdiction for the year 1878; Master of LaFayette Council, No. 1, Royal Select and Super Excellent Masters, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Council of Massachusetts, from 1875 until 1883; Charter Master of Washington Council, 1888 to 1890; knighted in Columbia Commandery, No. 2, Knights Templar, March 14, 1868; was Grand Lecturer of the Grand R. Chapter of the District of Columbia from December 1873 to December 1875, and Grand Lecturer of the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia, 1876. In the absence of the High Priest of LaFayette Chapter in Europe nearly the whole of the year 1873, and while King of that Chapter and Grand Lecturer Lecturer of the Grand Chapter of the District of Columbia, at the request of the Grand Chapter of Canada, and as representing LaFayette Chapter, I conferred the Royal Arch degree on three actual candidates before the Grand Chapter of Canada, in the town hall at Kingston, Canada. I held, at various times during my Masonic career, the offices of Grand Representative of the Grand Chapter of Canada; the Grand Chapter of Nova Scotia, B.C.; the Grand Mark Lodge of England, Scotland, and Wales, and the Colonies and Dependencies of the British Crown, and of the Grand Lodge of Arkansas, F.A.A.M., which latter representation I still hold.

Contest Winner's Letter
Joseph S. McCoy Expresses Gratitude to F.G. Smith Piano Company
The F.G. Smith Piano Company has received a letter from Mr. Joseph S. McCoy, 523 B street northeast, winner of the Webster player-piano in the company's recent dot-counting contest, in which Mr. McCoy expresses his gratitude and his appreciation of the courtesy and fairness of the judges and of the officers of the F.G. Smith Company. The letter reads as follows:

Washington, D.C., April 21, 1908
The F.G. Smith Piano Company
1225 Pennsylvania avenue northwest,
Washington, D.C.

Gentlemen: I acknowledge with thanks the receipt this date of the Webster player piano awarded me by your company as the result of the decision of the judges in your dot-counting contest, and, in so doing desire to add that, considering the high character and standing of the judges, I am assured of the perfect fairness with which the contest was conducted.

I have given the instrument due trial and find it in mechanism, beauty and tone, the best I have seen.

I gave much time and effort to the count, but in view of the courtesy and kindness shown, and the fact that the gift of the piano resulted, I was indeed well repaid.

Wishing the company continued success in its business and business methods, and again thanking you for your kindness, I beg to remain,

Very gratefully,
(Signed) Jos. S. McCoy

|                      | The Montgomery Advertiser of the 18th inst. states "A young gentleman by the name of McCrabb, formerly of Washington, but more recently of Columbus (Ga.) was shot and killed by some unknown person on the corner of Market and Perry streets last night. We understand from the eyewitness of the difficulty that the deceased gave his antagonist a blow with his fist, whereupon the latter drew his pistol and shot him. Mr. McCrabb ran to the opposite corner and fell within a few feet of the drug store of Messrs. Glackmayer & Hillerd. He did not survive exceeding five minutes after being shot. The ball took effect in the left breast just above the nipple. The person who did the deed immediately fled up Perry street."
|                      | We understand that the deceased, the son of late Capt. J.W. McCrabb, of the U.S. Army, was a youth at the time of his murder, not being 21 years of age. All efforts to discover his assassin have as yet proved unsuccessful. |                |            |

|                      | The remains of Captain John W. McCrabb, late of the United States Army; who died in Florida on the 6th of November, 1839, were this day consigned to their last resting place near the Eastern branch of the Potomac. The writer of this tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased had not an acquaintance of many years' standing with him; but it was long enough to know his ample merits. In the relations of life, as a friend, and the more interesting ones of husband and father, he was not excelled, and his acknowledged devotion to his profession, and the zeal and energy with which he pursued it, have made his death a public loss. Cut off in early life, he leaves a widow and child to whom this bereavement is a severe affliction, but there is reserved for her the consolation arising from his fair fame, and for the infant son the valuable inheritance of a bright example. |                |            |
|                      | Capt. J.W. McCrabb was the only child of Captain McCrabb of the Army, who died of yellow fever at Baton Rouge, in the 29th year of his age, leaving an infant son, the subject of this memoir. It is a remarkable concurrence of events that both father and son died at the same age, held the same rank in the Army, were cut off by the same disease in a Southern climate, each leaving an infant son. |                |            |
|                      | Capt. J.W. McCrabb graduated at West Point, in 1833, and, during the brief term of his subsequent career, was actively engaged in the line of the Army on topographical duty, and in the general staff as assistant quartermaster. The zeal and intelligence with which he performed these services marked him for one to whom great trusts could be confided, and, for the commencement of hostilities in the South, to the time of his decease, he was entrusted with important duties in Alabama and Florida, and gained a high reputation in the Army by the manner in which he acquitted himself. With all the qualities for distinction in war, when the just hopes of friendship were beginning to be realized, he fell by a pestilential fever, and added another name to the list of gallant spirits whose loss the Army has been called on to deplore. McDonald, Ann B.  d. 1 Jun 1878  R72/287

The Evening Star, June 3, 1878
Sudden Death of a Lady from Heart Disease
Mrs. Ann B. McDonald, wife of Major W.P. McDonald, chief clerk of the office of Secretary of the Senate, died about 9 o’clock yesterday under peculiarly distressing circumstances. Major McDonald is lying dangerously ill of an affection of the kidneys at his residence, 1108 New York avenue. His wife had been suffering with angina pectoris for the last three or four years and it was thought that she had entirely recovered. The physicians having little hopes of the Major’s recovery suggested to Mrs. McDonald that his relatives be telegraphed for. This announcement brought on an attack of her old disease, and, after a paroxysm which lasted about three quarters of an hour, she died. Mrs. McDonald was a daughter of John Holden, who held the position of mayor of Norfolk for twenty-two years. The funeral will take place from the residence of the family at 2 o’clock tomorrow afternoon.

H.B. McDonald Dead
For Years Senate's Chief Clerk and Parliamentarian
His Demise Unexpected
His Position Had in Turn Been Held by Father and Grandfather
Cycle of One Hundred Years
Funeral Arrangements are not Complete, but Services to Be Held Tomorrow
Hubbard Bowyer McDonald, chief clerk and parliamentarian of the United States Senate, died at the Bachelor Apartment House, 17th and H streets northwest, at 6 o'clock last night of cancer of the liver. Until two months ago he was in apparently robust health; two weeks ago his condition became serious. He began to sink yesterday morning and was unconscious several hours before death came. His son and only child, Donald McDonald of New York, was at his bedside.

Although the final arrangements have not yet been decided upon, Donald McDonald stated last night that his father would be buried from St. John's Episcopal Church tomorrow afternoon, interment to be at Rock Creek cemetery. Mr. McDonald's wife is in New York. His sister, Mrs. Sinclair, and his brother, William J. McDonald, both reside in Washington.

Early in January Mr. McDonald complained of pains in his shoulders and limbs, which, he stated, were rheumatic in character. They became so acute that he obtained a leave of absence from the Capitol and went to Hot Springs, Ark., upon the advice of friends, to get the benefit of the baths. He remained at that resort several weeks, but instead of improving his condition grew worse, and he returned to Washington February 15. He was then attended by his family physician, Dr. Ralph Walsh, and his illness was diagnosed as a cancer of the liver, which finally proved fatal.

His Sufferings Intense

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery  Last Updated: 2/12/2015
According to a statement made by his son last night, Mr. McDonald suffered intense agony almost every moment up to within a few hours before death claimed him. "Those last few hours," said Donald McDonald, "must have been pleasant ones to my father, as the expression of suffering and pain passed from his face as he lay unconscious, his life rapidly ebbing away. When he died there was a slight trace of a smile about his mouth."

Mr. McDonald was regarded as an authority on parliamentary law and on practices of the Senate and was appointed March 4, 1873, to the position which he held at the time of his death. He was born in Washington in 1854, and after several years of instruction by a private tutor was graduated from Georgetown University. He was married in 1874.

The position of chief clerk and parliamentarian of the Senate which Mr. McDonald held was also held by his father and grandfather. Among some of Mr. McDonald's most treasured papers were those containing requests from prominent senators, including Daniel Webster, Stephen A. Douglas and Thomas H. Benton, for the appointment of his father to the place to which Mr. McDonald succeeded.

His grandfather, John Gunn McDonald, was a prominent man in his time and was in high favor with the national leaders and prominent senators in the early part of the nineteenth century.

When he died a paper was passed around the Senate requesting the appointment of his son, Andrew McDonald, Hubbard McDonald's father, to the position. The appointment was made upon the earnest solicitation of twenty-eight senators, being more than half of the members who composed the Senate at that time. Among his effects Mr. McDonald has the letter which was written by Mr. Benton and signed by the senators alluded to, with their various recommendations, urging his father's appointment. He looked upon the paper as interesting and valuable, because of the aggregation of signatures of the most prominent men in public life at that time. His father died in office after a service of nearly forty-two years.

His Own Appointment
Speaking of his appointment some time ago Mr. McDonald said:

"My own position was created at the request of my father, although I was a trifle young, and I was assigned to duty March 4, 1873. I was appointed a journal clerk in 1878 under a political change of administration of the Senate, but was superseded by my predecessor in 1883, who was reappointed to that office, but died March 12, 1898, and I was again appointed journal clerk."

Mr. McDonald's mother was a Miss Ann Johnson, daughter of Thomas Johnson, nephew and secretary of Thomas Johnson, an early colonial governor of Maryland. She was born at Annapolis in 1787, and died in 1881.

As chief clerk and parliamentarian of the Senate it was Mr. McDonald's pleasure and duty to break in President Roosevelt when he was Vice President. Referring to this experience, Mr. McDonald once stated that Mr. Roosevelt was one of the most obdurate of all the Vice Presidents that it had been his fortune to coach. Mr. Roosevelt was a man, he said, of the most decided opinions, and was at first wont to pay but little heed to the early precedents in parliamentary practice.

Had Mr. McDonald lived another year he would have completed the cycle of one century during which he, his father and his grandfather were in the service of the United States Senate.

Death Unexpected
The news of his death came as an especial shock to his many friends because until his late illness he was a man of fine physique and athletic build. At one time he was a great lover of outdoor sports, but in these he had not indulged in recent years.

Mr. McDonald was a member of the Metropolitan Club and was prominent in social circles.

Funeral of H.B. McDonald From St. John's Church
The funeral of Mr. H. Bowyer McDonald, for many years chief clerk and parliamentarian of the Senate, took place from St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church yesterday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The gathering, which was a large one, was composed of many of the men prominent in the capital of the nation and who had known and esteemed Mr. McDonald during his life. Rev. Dr. Roland Cotton Smith, rector of St. John's Church, conducted the services, which consisted of the simple and impressive Episcopal ritual for the dead. The pallbearers were chosen from among the close friends of the deceased, and were as follows: Mr. Robert
The deceased came of a line of distinguished ancestry, as previously stated in The Star, his grandfather, John Gunn McDonald, having been prominent in the political world in his day. While in the employ of the Senate Mr. McDonald became acquainted with many distinguished men. He had among his papers written requisition from Daniel Webster, Thomas H. Benton and Stephen A. Douglas, asking the appointment of Mr. McDonald's father to the position in the Senate, to which his son afterward succeeded. The elder McDonald served over forty years in the position, in turn succeeding his father, and the three rounding out a cycle of nearly one hundred years in the office.

McDonald. On Sunday last, at half past twelve o'clock, in the 21st year of her age, Mary Jane McDonald, eldest daughter of the late John G. McDonald, of this city.

Thus passes life away, and those who are around us in all the buoyancy of hope, and youth, and gladness, depart, and leave but the memory of their worth to tell us that they have been. Sad office for the lingering friends to bid a last adieu to one they love! But mingled with the sadness there is a consolation in knowing that she has found "a peaceful passage to a more peaceful life." Her generous and affectionate disposition, her mildness and intelligence, will long live in the remembrance of her friends. And while the tear flows in the anguish of present bereavement, let Hope whisper to their hearts, we shall meet again. "Like the fading beauties of the field are the days of man! Transient, like them, are the flowers of human hope! But there is a garden whose bloom is eternal, for it lies beyond the reach of time." C.

McDonald, Richmond
Department this life, on Sunday morning, the 5th instant, Richmond McDonald, aged 20, the eldest son of John G. McDonald, Esq. When we are called upon to mourn over the early dead, there is a depth in misery almost too severe for expression. He who has lost us, was a young man of fine talents and a noble heart, and those who watched over his illness can testify to his manliness in affliction, and Christian resignation, at the approach of his dissolution. A true son -- a kind brother -- a warm friend -- in the dawn of his life, the fountain had ceased to flow, and we stand with our empty urns around his grave, but his memory shall live with us.

McDonald, William E.
Departed this life, on Sunday morning, the 5th instant, Richmond McDonald, aged 20, the eldest son of John G. McDonald, Esq. When we are called upon to mourn over the early dead, there is a depth in misery almost too severe for expression. He who has lost us, was a young man of fine talents and a noble heart, and those who watched over his illness can testify to his manliness in affliction, and Christian resignation, at the approach of his dissolution. A true son -- a kind brother -- a warm friend -- in the dawn of his life, the fountain had ceased to flow, and we stand with our empty urns around his grave, but his memory shall live with us.

Old Resident Dead
James P. McElfresh Succumbs to Paralysis

Funeral services over the remains of James Philip McElfresh, who died early Thursday morning, took place this afternoon at 2 o'clock from the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Clara I. Hughes, 804 H street northeast. Rev. Benjamin P. Truitt, pastor of the First Methodist Protestant Church of which church Mr. McElfresh had long been a communicant, conducted the services. The pallbearers were chosen from among the immediate friends of the deceased and were: Messrs. John C. Yost, Conrad F. Bennett, Alfred F. Flather, Olin Smith, H.E. Rottmer and George Flather. The casket, which was placed in the center of the parlor, was banked with flowers sent by the friends of the deceased.

Mr. McElfresh was eighty-two years of age. He was formerly employed at the Ebbitt House as the head carpenter and for many years resided on I street northwest. He was quite well acquainted with Gen. Grant while he occupied the White House. During the life of Mr. Henry Burch, proprietor of the Ebbitt House, he and Mr. McElfresh were warm friends, and though for a number of years the latter had retired from active life, he recalled many times the pleasure of his association with the former host of the Ebbitt.
The deceased was a member of the Association of the Oldest Inhabitants of the District of Columbia and his interest in the organization, its doings and the life of the city of Washington seemed never to fail. Having retired after a life well spent, Mr. McElfresh lived at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Hughes, where every care was given him during his declining years. He was several times struck with apoplexy and the final attack came Thursday morning.

Mrs. Anne Marie McElfresh, wife of the deceased, died several years ago. His daughter, Mrs. Hughes, and four grandchildren survive him. The interment was in Congressional cemetery.

Fatal Accident
This morning, about 4 o'clock, as the night tonnage train was coming in, it ran over a sailor boy named Stephen McElroy, employed as a messenger at the Navy Yard, taking off one leg near the hip, and the other at the knee. It was dark at the time, and it was impossible for the engineer to see the boy before he was struck. He was taken to the Sanitary Home, where the necessary attention was paid him, but death ensued about 9 o'clock this morning. He came recently from Boston, where he has a mother living, at No. 5 Mechanics Court.

Capt. Walter M. McFarland Lauded for Important Aids to Science

Capt. Walter Martin McFarland, U.S.N., retired, former vice president of the Westinghouse Electric Co. and for 20 years manager of the marine department of Babcock & Wilcox, died last night at his home, 1868 Columbia road.

Born August 5, 1859, in Washington, he attended Columbian College, now George Washington University, before going to Annapolis. He graduated with second honors in the class of 1879.

Brilliant work in the Engineer Corps made him chief engineer of the Navy by 1899, when he resigned. During his service career he served twice as assistant to Admiral George W. Melville. He was secretary to the Division of Naval and Marine Engineering at the Naval and Marine Conference at the World Fair of 1893, and in 1897 served as American delegate to the International Conference of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers at London. In the same year he served on the Roosevelt Personnel Board which reorganized the service divisions of the naval forces.

He was a frequent writer on engineering subjects, his most significant achievement in this line being an article outlining a new method for the determination of a ship's speed, the method now in general use. In 1883 and 1885 he was assistant professor of mechanical engineering at Cornell University, a lecturer at the Naval War College in 1894 and had lectured often at the post-graduate school at Annapolis and at Columbia and Johns Hopkins Universities.

Secretary and editor of the American Society of Naval Engineers in 1890, 1892, 1893 and 1898, he served as vice president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers in 1902-3, as vice president of the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers in 1902 and 1921 and as president from 1922 to 1924. He had been a trustee of the Webb Institute of Naval Architecture since 1913, served as vice president from 1916 to 1926 and as president from 1926 until his retirement from active life in 1931.

After 1899 he did significant work for Westinghouse, becoming manager of the marine department of the firm of Babcock & Wilcox in 1911 and remaining there until his retirement in 1931, when he returned to Washington to live.

A bachelor, he is survived by three sisters, Mrs. J.W. Dunn and Mrs. Edmund Barry, both of Washington, and Mrs. Eugene Makosky of Baltimore.

A special communication from Dickerson N. Hoover, inspector general of the Steamboat Inspection Service, attributed to Capt. McFarland, "as much as to any living person, the credit for rules which have to do with material for boilers and construction of the same."

"Had he accomplished nothing else in his life but that work," Mr. Hoover continued, "it would stand as a monument to his efficiency and public service."

Funeral services will be held at the residence Thursday at 11 a.m.

W.D. McFarland Dead
Eminent Vocalist Succumbs to Long Illness
Effect of An Accident
Suffered Injury While Bathing Months Ago
Leader in Musical Circles
Possessed Tenor Voice of Unusual Range and Endurance.
Which Won General Admiration
William D. McFarland died at the family residence, 616 A street southeast, at 3:30 o’clock this morning. The primary cause of his death was an accident which occurred while he was bathing months ago.

He began to fail rapidly several days ago, and it was feared that the end was not far away. He was conscious to the last and maintained his usual interest in everything that was transpiring.

Arrangements for the funeral are being made this afternoon.

In addition to his wife, a son and a little daughter survive him. The son is Walter R. McFarland of this city. He was a brother of Walter M. McFarland of Pittsburgh, acting vice president of the Westinghouse Electrical and Manufacturing Company, who resigned his commission in the navy to accept that position; Mrs. Helen M. Dunn of Pittsburgh, widow of Dr. John Dunn of Washington; Mrs. Edmund Barry, wife of Dr. Edmund Barry of this city, and Mrs. E.C. Makowsky, wife of Rev. Dr. Makosky of Baltimore.

Position in Musical Circles
In musical circles Mr. McFarland occupied a unique position. To exceptional vocal endowments were added musical abilities of a high order. His voice was a vigorous tenor of unusual range, and the steadiness of his nerve and endurance, both vocally and physically, attracted admiration at all times. It was often said, in comparing his singing with that of others that while some tenors could do certain things, Mr. McFarland could do all things in the singing line well.

He was a thoroughly conscientious singer, a fine soloist and a first tenor in male quartet work that left nothing to be desired according to the estimate of his associate vocalists. In a mixed quartet he was rated as first-class. Mr. McFarland's reliability as a singer was recognized by all in musical circles.

He had sung in all nearby cities and had toured as an oratorical singer to many cities as far as upper New York state. One of his most remarkable performances was his singing of the solo part in "The Light of Asia," practically at sight, which he did with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the audience. On this occasion, which was several years ago, word was received during the morning rehearsal of the chorus on the day of the performance that the professional tenor who had been engaged to sing the solo part would be unable to appear, and Mr. McFarland was called out of his place in the chorus and told he would have to sing the solo part. With this short notice, it is said, he rendered the part in excellent style.

As a member of the Apollo quartet he appeared in Richmond and Lynchburg, Va.; Baltimore, Shippensburg, Pa., and other places, and contributed to the reputation gained by the quartet.

A Native of Washington
William D. McFarland was born in Washington, October 24, 1861. He was educated in the public schools, and early in life became prominent in singing circles. He was married to Miss Mary Oulahan, sister of Richard V. Oulahan, chief of the Washington bureau of the New York Sun.

He entered the railway mail service November 8, 1877, and by reason of his excellent clerical ability was soon assigned to the office of the general superintendent. He resigned December 17, 1889, to accept a position in the census office, then under the Department of the Interior, at the request of its officials, to assist in organizing the stationery division in connection with that office. He was quickly promoted and served in the stationery division of the census office until the work was completed. He resigned March 10, 1892, and the same day was reinstated in the railway mail service, and fourteen days later was transferred to the bureau of the second assistant postmaster general, where he has since been employed.

Highly Praised by Official Superior
John W. Hollyday, chief clerk of the office of the second assistant postmaster general, in a statement prepared for the Postmaster General, stated: "Mr. McFarland is a man of the best habits and of fine character. His every assignment has been upon work of an exceptionally high class. He has never failed to meet every demand upon him and the expectations of the officials under whom he has labored."

In his early life Mr. McFarland led the singing in the Sunday school of the Church of the Reformation and sang in its choir. He had sung in the best choirs of Washington for many years. For a long time he had been connected with the choir of the Calvary Baptist Church, the Washington Hebrew Congregation and the Church of the Covenant. Mr. McFarland was also a member of the noted Apollo Club and other musical organizations, and was for many years a prominent member of a Masonic quartet.

Prominent in Masonic Circles
He was a Mason, and widely known and highly esteemed in Masonic circles. He was made a Master Mason in B.B. French Lodge, No. 15, F.A.A.M., October 16, 1890; a Royal Arch Mason in Columbus Chapter, No. 1, June 6, 1896, and was knighted in Washington Commandery, No. 1, K.T., October 14, 1896. He was also a member of Almas Temple, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Cause of Death
Some time ago, while bathing, Mr. McFarland ruptured a muscle, tendon or ligament in the back of his neck, at the base of the brain, causing him great distress and compelling his absence from his duties. For a long time the cause of the trouble was not known, and it was not until the latter part of February or the early part of March of the present year that his real trouble was discovered. March 10 he was taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore for an operation, and a tumor at the base of the brain was removed. His physicians at the time predicted his speedy recovery.

Intimate friends of Mr. McFarland said today that aside from his ability as a vocalist he was a man of fine ability, having a well trained mind and a capacity for work equaled by few.

In his personal life he was a man of lovable qualities and won the esteem and regard of all who came in contact with him. His domestic life was ideal and at all times he exhibited the warmest affection for his family and friends.

A short service was conducted at the home of his parents, 636 C street northeast, after which the remains were removed to the church, where requiem mass was in order.

Rev. David S. Buel, S.J., president of Georgetown University delivered a sermon. Rev. Father Joseph McGuire was in charge of the mass. A delegation from the Sunday school and from the Junior Holy Name Society attended the funeral. Forty boys, composing the fourth preparatory class, accompanied by Rev. F.X. Anglin, preceded the hearse and pallbearers. The interment was in Congressional cemetery.

The pallbearers were John Murphy, James Fury, A. Walton, W. Sewall, G. Miller and Edward Yeager.

McGee. William J. McGee, Jr.
"Entered into Life Eternal," A noble little boy--so full of life, hope, joy and boundless possibilities. Willie, being an embodiment of sunshine, had a natural affinity for all that was cheerful, bright and good.
With the tender, innocent heart of a child, he loved all animals, and they loved him; he loved each opening flower, and watched its expansion with the eagerness of childhood and the joyousness of youth.

Willie seemed to know that he was in Heaven's Preparatory School, and that his time was short. His naturally brilliant mind developed rapidly; he loved noble thoughts and could express them eloquently. He loved music, and hurried in his practice as though making haste to join the Choir Invisible. The youngest in his class at Georgetown University, he held his own with credit, and won the love and respect of all of his teachers as well as that of the president of the university.

The little man was ever a messenger of sunshine and gladness, the embodiment of faith and hope and love. His soul developed as rapidly as the fragrant buds of the springtime, and needing purer air, it blossomed in Heaven. He was a devoted follower of the Master, and his implicit faith and trust in Him is an inspiration to his friends.

When the orders came to "come up higher" he made haste, and was ready.

A fearless and devoted young soldier, he has finished his work and gained his crown.

Death of a Well-Known Resident
Mr. W.C. McGill died very suddenly last evening at his residence, No. 805 East Capitol street. Mr. McGill was a native of Bucks county, Pa., born in 1812, and in early life followed the sea, becoming a master of some of the old-time sea-going sailing vessels. In 1849 he went to California, and two years later to Australia, where he engaged in business a number of years and then returned to this country, locating at Cincinnati in 1859. He assisted in raising some of the volunteer regiments early in the war and was attached to Siegel's brigade, in charge of the ammunition train. At the close of the war he came to this city and served a number of years as a member of the Capitol police. About 1874 he went to Cincinnati and was engaged in the real estate business there and in St. Louis for several years. For a few years prior to 1882 he was a guard at the District jail. Since 1882 he had, on account of bad health, kept to his house most of the time. He was sitting up and reading the paper half an hour before he died.

Member of Gen. Garibaldi's Staff -- Had Lived in Washington Eleven Years
Funeral services for Hugh McGregor, one of the founders of the American Federation of Labor, and a lieutenant under Garibaldi, who died at his home in Prince Georges county, Md., early Saturday morning, were held at the home of his son, John McGregor, 1315 S street northwest, at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Burial was in Congressional cemetery.

Mr. McGregor was born in London in 1841, and all of his life was a stanch friend of organized labor. When a young man in London he joined a party of volunteers for the patriotic war which Garibaldi was waging in Italy and went to that country. He served through the Neapolitan campaign and was a member of Gen. Garibaldi's staff when the liberals captured Rome. He was severely wounded in the leg by a cannon shot at the battle of Messina. At the close of the war he returned to London and engaged in labor organization, forming unions which today are agitating the adoption of the Lloyd George tax bill. In 1869, however, he was forced to leave England because of being refused employment, owing to his intense zeal in the matter of labor organizations.

Laid Plans With Gompers
Mr. McGregor resided for some time in New York city, organizing shortly after his arrival there the Jewelers' Union. It was then that he met again Samuel Gompers, whom he had known in England, and together they laid the plans for the formation of the present American Federation of Labor.

In 1889 he was a delegate to the International Trades' Union convention in Paris, and at that time started the memorable movement for an international eight-hour workday. In 1890 he was a delegate to the seamen and longshoremen's convention in Glasgow.

He came to Washington to reside about eleven years ago, and since that time had been prominent as a worker in the labor field and a contributor on labor and economic questions to the leading American and English magazines. Besides his contributions to the press and magazines of the country, Mr. McGregor wrote several books on labor subjects.

He leaves two sons, John and George, the former of this city and the latter a resident of Philadelphia.

McIntyre, Charles H. d. 11 Mar 1889

Suicide of a Marine

He Prefers Death to Life in the Barracks

He was a Young Man, Chafing Under the Discipline, and Deserted--Being Captured and Confined in a Police-Station Cell, He Takes Poison

Just five months ago Chas. H. McIntyre, a young man, then a citizen of Charleston, W. Va., registered his name at the recruiting office of the marine corps and became a marine for five years. Like many other marines, he complained to his friends of bad treatment received and often wished that he had never entered the service. On inauguration day McIntyre, with other marines, was sent out to take part in the parade. Once when the line halted he left the ranks and went into a saloon and got a drink. For this conduct McIntyre was given five days in irons in the guardhouse. His five days had expired, and yesterday morning he was placed on guard duty at the barracks.

Desertion

He watched his chance, and when his commanding officer was out of sight he dropped his musket and went from the building, with the intention of again, becoming a private citizen. As soon as he was missed from the barracks a message was sent out offering a reward of $10 for his capture. Acting Corporal McDonald went in search of the deserter and was with him near a house of ill-fame, on Maryland avenue, about 9 o'clock last night, when Policeman McNamara came along. McIntyre was in citizens clothes, but McDonald gave the officer the "tip," and the deserter ran into a house, but before he could get out through the back door.

The Policeman Caught Him

He wanted to go upstairs, as the officer thought, to get something, probably a revolver, but the latter would not let him go and took him to the station. He was quiet when taken before Lieut. Vernon and gave up a knife, which, he said, was all he had in his pockets. He requested the lieutenant to keep in the station over night and not send him back to the barracks until this morning. The lieutenant had no objection to complying with his wish, and McIntyre was led to one of the cells in the rear. Before his arrest he told some persons that he would to the barracks. When questioned by the station clerk, the prisoner had but little to say and showed no signs of intending to injure himself. When placed in the cell he asked for a cup of water and requested the officer in charge to allow the cup to remain in his cell. The request was not an unusual one and the cup was left in the cell with him. The station clerk and officer took their seats behind the rail, and were waiting the arrival of another prisoner or to receive a telephone message. Hardly had fifteen minutes elapsed before Clerk Voss was attracted to the cell room by the dropping of a tin cup. He went to the marine's cell, where he saw the prostrate form of the young man lying upon the concrete floor.

He Was in Convulsions

and his appearance indicated that he had but a few minutes to live. The cell door was opened and a policeman sent for a physician, but before he arrived the young man expired. Beside him on the floor lay a small bottle which was broken. From this bottle, labeled poison, the prisoner had taken a deadly drug. News of his death was sent to the barracks and a number of his comrades called during the night to see his body. Some of the corroborated the statements made by McIntyre, before his death, concerning the treatment he had received. The coroner investigated the case today and gave a certificate of death from suicide. The body was subsequently turned over to the government officials.

What is Said at the Navy Yard

Marine officials at the navy yard state that the deceased joined the post only on the 20th of February, and that his short career there was anything but creditable. Immediately after coming there he was given liberty, but did not return until 9:20 the next morning, 14 hours and 20 minutes over liberty. For this he was given ten days in double irons and forty days' restriction. He was released from imprisonment just in time to take part in the inaugural procession, but left the ranks without permission, handing his gun to a comrade. For this act of insubordinate he was given five days on bread and water. The day after his release he deserted, so that out of eighteen days' service in Washington he served fourteen in the guard-house. He appeared morose and sullen, and the officers are inclined to believe that his mind was not well balanced.

Seriously Burned

Mrs. Ellen McKee and Miss May Spriggs of No. 127 4th street southeast, were seriously burned shortly before 9 o'clock this morning. In passing the latrobe heater, which was red hot, Mrs. McKee's dress accidentally came in contact with it, and was instantly in a blaze. Miss Spriggs went at once to her friend's assistance, but her clothing was also set on fire. An alarm was raised and Policeman Vansant and his wife hurried into the house and extinguished the flames. Mr. Vansant had one of his hands burned during his efforts to help the ladies. Professional aid was rendered by Drs. Wilson and Wiley.

Result of Burns Received in Her Home Last Tuesday

Mrs. Ella McKee, wife of Mr. Harry H. McKee, cashier of the National Capital Bank, died about 9:30 o'clock this morning at her home on 4th street near B street southeast, from the effects of burns sustained Tuesday last, as told in The Star of that day. Mrs. McKee's dress took fire from contact with the latrobe in her home, and almost immediately she was enveloped in flames. Her sister, Miss Ida Briggs, who was with her, at once endeavored to smother the blaze with a rug, and in this attempt was herself badly burned on both arms, from hand to shoulder.

Mrs. McKee became frantic with pain and fright, and ran into the yard, where Policeman Vanzandt, a neighbor, caught her and rolled her form in the snow, putting out the fire, but not before her clothing had been almost totally consumed. She was horribly burned.

Besides her husband, their three little children, aged four, six and eight years, respectively, are left to mourn. Mrs. McKee was about 29 years of age.

Wm. McKee's Will
Yesterday in the Probate Court a caveat to the will of the late Wm. McKee was filed. The paper filed as the will on the 21st leaves his estate to Mary John Elizabeth Miller, subject to the dower interest of the widow Caroline McKee. The latter by Messrs. Cook and Sutherland claims that the deceased was at the time he made the will in a greatly enfeebled condition at Providence hospital; that the paper was prepared by interested parties and he was induced to sign it under duress and by fraudulent representations and undue importunities and influences of Mary E. Miller, a niece of Mrs. McKee, or other persons acting in her interest. |

The Two Wills of William McKee

In the Probate Court, in the case of the estate of the late Wm. McKee, who died recently at Providence hospital from the effect of injuries received at 5th and K streets by being run over, a paper was filed yesterday purporting to be his last will. A few days after the death of Mr. McKee a paper purporting to be the last will, executed at the hospital, was filed, in which he bequeathed his real estate to his daughter, Mrs. George O. Miller, subject to the dower interest of the widow. The paper now filed by the widow, who had previously filed a caveat to the paper in favor of Mrs. Miller, is dated in September 1884, and leaves his estate to his widow absolutely.

The Two Wills of William McKee

In the register of wills' office today a caveat was filed to the paper purporting to be the will of the late Wm. McKee. The deceased died in Providence hospital August 20 from injuries received by having been run over by a wagon near 5th and K streets and a paper purporting to be his will was propounded as such. This left his estate, consisting principally of house and lot 725 6th street, to Mrs. Mary J.C. Miller, subject to the widow's dower. To this the widow filed a caveat, claiming that the execution of the paper was procured by undue influence and also filed a paper dated a few years since as the last will. Mrs. McKee died on the 7th instant and she left a will bequeathing the property to her relatives, and names Mr. Edwin Sutherland as executor and trustee, and he, with the relatives, files a caveat to the will of Wm. McKee while Mrs. Miller files a caveat as to the will of Mrs. McKee.

<td>Leonard W. McKenney, a printer, committed suicide in this city on Saturday night, between 11 and 12 o'clock, by cutting his throat. The deceased was about twenty-eight years of age at the time of his death. He formerly resided in Eaton Rapids, Mich., where he has or had a wife and child, as appears from letters found among his effects. He came to this city about the commencement of the present session of Congress, and has worked most of the time since at his business of printing in this city, and then with Messrs. Towers and Boyle was engaged in the publication of the Daily Virginia Chronicle at Alexandria. The Alexandria firm was dissolved about a week since, and McKenney, who had made many friends here by his amiable disposition, returned to this city, and engaged board at the public house of Mr. Robert Rainey, on D street near Seventh, and it was in his room at this house that he committed the fatal act. For some days past his spirits appear to have been so much depressed as to affect him with symptoms of insanity.</td>

Alexander McKenzie Was One of Oldest Workers in Local Government Service
Alexander McKenzie, 81 years old, head of the arrears division of the District assessor's office and prominent in Masonic circles, died last night at his home, 1340 Fairmont street, after a brief illness. Mr. McKenzie had been an employe of the District government for 60 years. For 15 years he was a deputy auditor and assistant tax assessor until about a year ago.

Born in Baltimore in 1848, he came to this city in 1862.

Mr. McKenzie's service record shows that he was appointed "about July 10, 1868," and served in the District auditor's office until July 1, 1902, when he was transferred to the assessor's office. There was one interval when he left the District service, according to the record, "from about the middle of November, 1870 to the middle of the year 1871."

Either Mr. McKenzie or Dr. William Tyndall was the senior in point of service in the District government, but Dr. Tyndall said today that he could not recall the exact date of his appointment. They were both appointed in the same year, but the records for that period are somewhat vague. Dr. Tyndall says that he believes Mr. McKenzie was probably the senior. Dr. Tyndall was formerly secretary to the Board of Commissioners. He is now in charge of the information bureau.

Mr. McKenzie served as master of St. John's Lodge, No. 11, F.A.M., in 1891. Later he transferred his membership to the Temple Noyes Lodge, No. 32.

Mr. McKenzie also was past high priest of Washington Naval Chapter, No. 6, Royal Arch Masons; past grand high priest of the Grand Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; past commander of Orient Commandery, No. 5, Knights Templar, and past grand commander of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templars in the District. He also was a member of Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Grace McKenzie; a son, J.V. McKenzie; a brother, William McKenzie, and a sister, Mrs. Isabel Venable.

Funeral arrangements are to be announced later.

The Evening Star, May 9, 1908, p. 5
This Is His Birthday
Alexander McKenzie
Great Scot!

With this brief but comprehensive description of Alexander McKenzie it will hardly be necessary to mention that since the cave dwellers of Perthshire first began to inscribe the more entertaining events of local history upon the wishbones of indigent waterfowl there have been but two great Scots worthy of mention -- and William Wallace is dead.

There is no intention of detracting from the fame of the immortal Wallace. From a passing glance at a rusty Claymore he could reproduce the accent of the departed southern who had wielded it in life. But Alexander McKenzie can appraise a fourteen-room dwelling from a casual glance at an isolated brick. But enough of these compliments.

Alexander McKenzie was born right here in Washington sixty years ago today. After plucking all the more desirable flowers of learning from those hearty educational plants the public schools and the George Washington University, he became interested in the organization and management of several business enterprises, among them the Washington Asphalt and Tile Company. He served as deputy auditor of the city from 1884 to 1892, and is a member of the permanent board of assessors of the District of Columbia.
Mr. McKenzie is prominent in Masonic circles.

Closing of the Career of a Highly Respected Citizen
Dr. Samuel A.H. McKim died at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon at his home, No. 25 A street southeast, after an illness that had confined him to his home for about two years. Farnsworth of Baltimore will officiate and the interment will be at Congressional cemetery. Dr. McKim was seventy-four years of age, and had practiced his profession in this city for nearly fifty years.

Dr. McKim's parents came to this city from England in 1804 and were married here in 1815. The moved to Massachusetts, where their son Samuel was born in 1826. Eighteen years later they returned to this city, when the father was appointed paymaster at the marine barracks. The son was sent to Columbian University from where he graduated in 1852. He entered upon the practice of his profession soon after he graduated. When President Lincoln called for volunteers in 1861 Dr. McKim was one of the first to respond. He organized a company and was mustered in as captain. During his service he was stationed at the Benning bridge. Dr. McKim was the first surgeon appointed to do duty in connection with the police department. This position he held for more than twenty-five years. About ten years ago he was appointed surgeon of the 3d Battalion, District of Columbia National Guard, and in June, 1893, he served in a similar capacity in the 1st Regiment, with the rank of captain. Dr. S.A.H. McKim, who resides on Capitol Hill says thieves came near leaving him destitute of clothing Thursday night robbed his house of silverware. One gift especially prized by him was stolen—a silver knife, inscribed, "An Orphan's Token to Dr. McKim,"—a gift presented years ago. The thieves must have used chloroform, he says, as in all their skirmishing no one in the house was awakened.

Dr. S.A.H. McKim's daughter, Harriet married Rev. Chas. M. Haddaway of Falls Church, Va., 15 October, 1884.

Tried Suicide

Partial Success of a Husband and Wife's Efforts

A deliberate attempt at double suicide was made Saturday evening by a husband and wife, after thirty years of happy married life. Poverty was the cause of the rash act, and Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah McKnew the parties. The attempt was made in a room at 306 Pennsylvania avenue, conducted as a lodging house, where the couple had been staying for a week past, and was partially successful, Mrs. McKnew dying from the effects of the poison, laudanum, at the Emergency Hospital, yesterday morning. The husband, however, is on the road to recovery and is now at the home of his brother, Benjamin P. McKnew, 2112 G street northwest.

Mr. McKnew came to this city about seven years ago and until recently was proprietor of the Slater House, at the corner of 2d and B streets, but his business gradually declined and he gave up the hotel business and took charge of the dining rooms at the Hannover Hotel. Sickness compelled him to relinquish that position and since then he had been drifting from bad to worse. Mrs. McKnew had been at work with a family at Takoma Park, but ill-health also compelled her to cease striving for a livelihood, and so at last the couple saw no other plan open but to end their lives.

Mr. McKnew Saturday evening called to the landlady of the lodging house and informed her that his wife was dead. Policeman Reynolds was called, and noting the situation he summoned Dr. Hickling. The latter did all in his power to better the condition of the unfortunate woman, life not then being extinct, and her husband, and later had them removed to Emergency Hospital, where Dr. McGrath and his assistants labored for several hours to overcome the effects of the poison, but without avail in the case of Mrs. McKnew.

In the room occupied by Mr. and Mrs. McKnew a letter was found stating that they had concluded to take their lives and adding that they wanted their bodies to go to a medical college. They added that they wanted no flowers, ministers nor priests.

When informed of his wife's death, Mr. McKnew remarked that it is only a question of time until he shall follow her, and that he is sorry the attempt to end his life did not succeed. The remains of the dead woman were taken to Lee's undertaking establishment, where funeral services of a private character were held this morning. Mr. Benjamin McKnew was very much distressed when informed of the action of his brother and sister-in-law, and claimed that he knew absolutely nothing of their penniless condition.

Fatal Casualty at the Navy Yard

We are pained to record another fatal accident at our Navy Yard. Yesterday afternoon, at the battery, whilst experimenting with a large thirty-two-pounder, which had been fired several times, the gun suddenly burst, and instantly killed Mr. Charles S. McLane, a gunner in the United States Navy. It is supposed that a fragment of the gun must have entered his head, as the upper part was shockingly mutilated. The deceased was a valuable officer, and generally esteemed. Several other officers narrowly escaped injury. The gun was not cast at the Navy Yard. It was loaded only with the ordinary charge, and the Coroner's Inquest, in their verdict, express the opinion that every care and precaution was used by those who had charge of the battery, and that no blame whatever is attributable to any person.

Fatal Jump From Car
Rev. McLaren's Wife Killed on Bridge in Baltimore

Mrs. Ida McLaren, wife of Rev. James McLaren, pastor of Grace M.E. Church, Hampden, a suburb of Baltimore, jumped and sustained injuries from which she died shortly after 6 o'clock last evening while on her way to the hospital. The accident occurred on the Maryland avenue bridge, as Mrs. McLaren saw her husband fall from a moving car on which she was a passenger. Mrs. McLaren died on one of the Roland Park cars as she was being hurried to St. Luke's Hospital, a couple of blocks away.

Coroner Linthicum decided the case one of accidental death. The body was removed from the hospital to the parsonage, 727 3d avenue, Hampden, last night by Undertaker Marshall.

Rev. and Mrs. McLaren came over to Washington on a pleasure trip Monday and returned a few minutes before the accident occurred. They arrived at Union station in Baltimore and walked through the passageway to Maryland avenue to board the car. When the car came along it was well filled, and some persons were standing.

After making her way to a proffered seat Mrs. McLaren sat down and her husband called to her that he would follow on the next car, which would probably not be so crowded. The car started, and almost at the same time Mrs. McLaren remembered she had no money with her. She called to Rev. McLaren and he ran to catch the moving car. As he tried to jump upon the footboard he fell. Several persons realized he was about to fall and jumped to their feet. The next instant Mr. McLaren was rolling on the bridge.

With a cry which startled every one, Mrs. McLaren rushed to the side of the car and jumped off. She seemed to fall backward. Mr. Reese alighted and ran to the minister and his wife. Mrs. McLaren lay in the driveway. Her husband was getting up when assistance arrived. Blood flowed from the minister's head, and Mrs. McLaren gave evidence of being seriously injured. Another car had come up in the meanwhile and Mrs. McLaren was placed in it. When she was taken into the hospital Dr. G. Lewis Wetzel made an examination of the body. He said he found no pulse and pronounced her dead. A further examined showed that Mrs. McLaren had sustained a fracture at the base of the skull and that there was an internal hemorrhage.

Rev. McLaren's would proved to be nothing of a serious nature and the doctors soon attended to it. In speaking of the accident the minister seemed to think his wife's body struck him after he struck the ground. Her head undoubtedly came in contact with the ground. Coroner Linthicum said shock was the primary cause of death.

In another month Mrs. McLaren would have been forty-nine years old. She was born in Fairfax county, Va., her father being Mr. George Barber. Besides her husband, she leaves a daughter, Mrs. Paul Pardew, and a sister, Mrs. Eliza Walson of Washington.

Funeral of Mrs. McLaren
Remains to Be Brought to Washington for Interment

Mrs. Ida McLaren, whose death ensued in Baltimore Wednesday evening from the effects of injuries received in jumping from a moving street car to the aid of Rev. James McLaren, her husband, was the daughter of the late George Barber, who resided in Anacostia, where he had large property interests. Mr. McLaren, the husband of the deceased woman, is an ex-pastor of the Anacostia Methodist Episcopal Church, corner of Jackson and Pierce streets, and the couple had been paying a visit to relatives and acquaintances in Anacostia, being on their return to their home in Hampden, a suburb of Baltimore, when the accident occurred.

The remains of Mrs. McLaren will be brought to this city for burial. They will arrive in Washington tomorrow afternoon according to the present arrangements, and will be conveyed to Congressional chapel, where services will take pace at 2 o'clock. Rev. Charles O. Isaac, the pastor of the church where Mr. McLaren formerly served, will be one of the officiants. The parents of Mrs. McLaren are interred in Congressional cemetery, and her remains will be buried there, it is understood.

Reference to the old records of the Anacostia Methodist Episcopal Church indicate that in 1874 the marriage of Rev. James L. McLaren, then the pastor, and Miss Ida Barber, the daughter of a prominent citizen of the town occurred. Until then the charge was looked upon as an appointment for an unmarried man, but since then it has been recognized as capable of providing for minister and wife. The Barber homestead where Mrs. McLaren spent her youth, still stands on Jefferson street, Anacostia, but has passed into other hands.

Rev. and Mrs. McLaren left Anacostia in 1877, but they returned in 1892, when Mr. McLaren received another appointment there. They left in 1897. Mr. McLaren has served as pastor at Gorsuch and North Capitol Street Methodist churches in this city. He is now pastor of Grace M.E. Church, Hampden, Baltimore, to which place they were going when the fatality occurred.

Mr. McLaren and his wife arrived unexpectedly in Anacostia Monday last and went to the residence of Mrs. Eliza P. Walson, the sister of the dead woman at 166 Maple avenue. It was the practice of Mr. and Mrs. McLaren to visit the suburb regularly, as Mr. McLaren had served two terms as pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the town, and they had numerous pleasant associations there. Mr. McLaren called upon many members of the Methodist Church, and Wednesday afternoon, just before leaving for home, took luncheon with Rev. Charles O. Isaac, the present pastor of the church.

Mr. and Mrs. McLaren left Anacostia for Baltimore in the afternoon after 4 o'clock. Their relatives and friends were shocked to learn of the result of their pleasure trip to this city, the first intelligence of which came to Mrs. Walson by telephone about 8 o'clock in the evening. She was told her sister had been badly hurt, and that her presence was necessary. Following the departure of Mrs. Walson and Mrs. George O. Walson for Baltimore came the announcement by telephone of Mrs. McLaren's death. The news did not reach her friends generally until it was read in The Star yesterday evening. Mr. George O. Walson, who was in New York, was notified of the death, and made arrangements to go to Baltimore last night.

A letter was received in Anacostia yesterday from a relative of the family in Baltimore telling of the circumstances of the case, the details being practically the same as printed in The Star yesterday. It is believed that Mrs. McLaren would not have made her sudden leap from the street car had she not feared her husband had been seriously hurt by falling while trying to reach the same car in order to provide her with car fare. When the car appeared it was well filled, and after seeing his wife secure a seat, Mr. McLaren called to her that he would follow on the next car. Then it was that she recalled having no car fare, a fact Mr. McLaren was made acquainted with by hearing her cry out to him. He endeavored to board the car, but was thrown to the Maryland avenue bridge, while his wife, startled at the accident, jumped from the car, with the result stated. She lived but ten minutes after falling, it was stated, her death occurring on one of the Roland Park cars as she was being taken to a hospital. Mrs. McLaren had been a sufferer from heart trouble for a long time her friends say, and the shock proved too much for her. Mr. McLaren was not seriously injured.

Remains Interred in Congressional Cemetery

The remains of Mrs. Ida L. McLaren, whose death occurred Wednesday evening last in Baltimore as the result of leaping from a moving street car in an endeavor to reach Rev. James McLaren, her husband, who had fallen, were brought to this city yesterday afternoon for interment in Congressional cemetery. The train bearing the body arrived at the railroad station about 1:30 o'clock, and was met by many who were at one time associated with Rev. and Mrs. McLaren in religious work. The pallbearers were Messrs. James H. Dony, Daniel C. Smithson, George W. King, jr., Arthur B. Suit, Frank McLean and Morris Otterback. The body was removed to the chapel in Congressional cemetery, where services were held. The officiating ministers were Rev. H.R. Naylor, the presiding elder of Washington district; Rev. Charles O. Isaac of Anacostia, and Rev. J.E. Amiss. The latter was one of the ministers assisting in the marriage ceremony of Rev. and Mrs. McLaren in Anacostia in 1874.

Mrs. Ada Ober Leech of this city, rendered "Some Time We'll Understand" as the service proceeded. The casket was covered with floral offerings, the tribute of friends and parishioners. Services were also held yesterday morning in Grace M.E. Church, Hampden, Baltimore, where Mr. McLaren is stationed as pastor. Mr. McLaren who sustained severe bruises in the accident which resulted in the death of his wife, went to the home of Mr. George O. Walson, 166 Maple avenue, Anacostia, immediately after the funeral and will remain there for the present.

Rev. J.B. McLaughlin, "Marrying Parson," Dies
Passes Away at His Home on G Street and Funeral Will Be Held Tomorrow Morning
Rev. J.B. McLaughlin, for a number of years a member of the bar and who was also a minister of the gospel, died at his home 400 G street southeast, yesterday morning. His funeral will take place from Boteler's chapel tomorrow morning at 10:30 o'clock. Interment will be in Congressional cemetery.

Mr. McLaughlin had been in ill health for more than two years, but his condition was not thought to be serious. He had slept well Tuesday night and was talking with his wife about ten minutes before he was stricken with heart disease and died. Mr. McLaughlin was seventy-seven years old and was a native of Pittsburgh.

His wife, to whom he was married fifty-five years ago, and two sons, George B. McLaughlin of this city and Frank McLaughlin now in California, survive him.

He came to this city from Little Rock, Ark., about fourteen years ago and soon after making Washington his home applied for admission to the bar, and was licensed to practice law in the District courts March 19, 1901. In October of the same year he was authorized to perform marriage ceremonies and until about three years ago, when ill health forced him to retire, he was prominent about the city hall, in his dual capacity of lawyer and minister, and was given the sobriquet of the "marrying parson" from the fact that he was called upon to perform the marriage ceremony several times each day for couples who after obtaining their licenses requested attaches of the courts to direct them to a minister.

Since Mr. McLaughlin's retirement from active work he was seen but seldom about the city hall, and for two years past he led a retired life.

 Locals
Capt. J.P. McKean, the well-known bookbinder, died at his residence, 445 New York avenue, yesterday. He was a native of Baltimore, born in June 1805. Sixty years ago he came to this city and has lived here since that time. He was much respected for his integrity of character.

McKechnie, John
Go to thy rest, my child,
Go to thy dreamless bed,
Gentle, meek, and mild,
With blessings on thy head;
Fresh roses in thy hand,
Buds on thy pillow laid,
Haste from this fearful land,
Where flowers so quickly fade.
The friends and relatives of the family are invited to the funeral, tomorrow afternoon, without further notice.

McKechnie, Mary M.
Husband, dear, weep not for me;
I am not yours, but Christ's alone—
He loved me best and took me home.

Mother, dear, weep not for Mary;
Her gentle spirit hath fled;
She sweetly sleeps in Jesus,
Among the silent dead.

Dear sisters and brothers, shed not a tear
Around my silent tomb;
Think of the lovely flower
We have in Heaven to bloom.
Her funeral will take place from the residence of her husband, 26th and M sts., on Sunday, the 1st inst., at 2 o'clock p.m., which her friends and those of the family are invited to attend.

A Child Pushed Under a Street Car and Killed

In Baltimore yesterday afternoon, Hugh McLeod, 7 years old, son of Hugh Suille van McLeod; living at 50 Granby street, was playing with four or five other boys on the water mains that arch the structure. While the boys were clinging to the top of the main, car No. 22 of the Citizen's line, came along, and as it was passing, McLeod fell between it and the upright supports of the bridge. He then rolled under the edge of the car, but before the wheels had passed over his body, the driver, who had heart the cry of alarm, stopped his horses. The lad, it is thought, was crushed by the car steps, and badly injured internally. He was picked up by the driver, conductor, and officer Cain and taken home, and physicians were called in. The little fellow displayed considerable nerve under his sufferings, for one so young, and said the accident was not the fault of the driver, but of one of the boys on the water main, who had pushed him. He died about 9 o'clock last night. Mr. McLeod, father of the little boy, whose family lived here, lost his wife about one week ago. She was the youngest daughter (Alice) of Mr. James T. Adams, of South Washington, deceased, an employee for many years of the Treasury printing bureau. The remains of young McLeod will be brought to this city where his parents formerly resided, for interment.

McLeod, Mary E.M.
McLeod. Suddenly, on Friday, November 2d, 1883, at 7:30 p.m., Mary E.M., youngest daughter of Robert and Christina McLeod, aged 1 year 1 month and 20 days.

I loved, oh! no tongue can tell
How much I loved her and how well;
God loved her, too, and He thought best
To take Mary home to rest.

Fold her hands together,
Like the wings of a tired dove;
Tenderly smooth her tresses--
None knew her but to love.

Funeral will take place from her parents' residence, 713 6th street southwest, on Sunday, November 4th inst., at 2:30 o'clock p.m. Friends are respectfully invited to attend.

McLeod, Thomas Scott
McLeod. Very suddenly, on Monday evening, Mr. Thomas Scott McLeod, eldest son of John McLeod, Esq. of the Post Office Department, aged 31 years. By this unexpected and distressing dispensation of Providence, a large family have been deprived of a kind and affectionate relative. Although endowed by nature with a sound and discriminating mind, he had yet been prevented by long continued ill health from mingling much with the world, and of thus adding to the circle of friends who now mourn his loss.

McMahon, James Blair

Killed in a Drunken Brawl
A Foolish Wrangle Between Two Printers Ends in a Frightful Tragedy

A fatal affray occurred last night at the corner of 7th street and Pennsylvania avenue between two printers named Wm. McMahon and George Hough. McMahon was terribly cut with a knife by Hough, one gash extending almost ear to ear, and the other extending from the right ear across the chest. Hough and McMahon, with two companions, James B. Nelson and J.W. Campbell, met early in the evening at Tip Hoy's restaurant, on 11th street, south of the avenue, and while in there Hough and McMahon engaged in a wrestling bout, in which McMahon worsted Hough. The men after leaving the restaurant, it appears, took drinks in other places, and Hough showed much bad feeling on account of the result of the wrestling bout. At the southeast corner of 7th st. and Louisiana avenue Hough and McMahon got into a wrangle, and Hough, according to the statements of Nelson, made a pass with his hand towards McMahon's head, and then ran down Louisiana avenue towards 6th street. Nelson saw McMahon stagger, and went up to him to ask what was the matter with him. McMahon said, "I am done for this time, Jim." McMahon reeled and Nelson caught him and supported him to the city post office, where the wounded man fell to the ground. Nelson applied for assistance at the city post office, and then ran to police headquarters where he reported the facts. Meanwhile Dr. Toner was summoned, and did what could be done to make McMahon comfortable until the arrival of the police ambulance, which conveyed the wounded man to Providence hospital.

Hough Arrested

It appears that Hough, after cutting McMahon, went to Miller's restaurant, corner of 6th street and Pennsylvania avenue, where he washed his hands. He then came out, and was standing on the corner when he was arrested by Officers Bast, Schulze and Montgomery, and taken to the seventh precinct station. He was sullen and uncommunicative, and, apparently, much under the influence of liquor. He denied all knowledge of the occurrence. Soon after being placed in a cell he fell asleep. A two-bladed pocket-knife, having one blade about three inches long and very sharp, was taken from him by the police. It was with this weapon, it is supposed, that the fatal wound was inflicted. A woman, who gave her name as Pearl Hough, was also put under arrest and held as a witness, because she said that she had been talking with McMahon. She was in Suplee's restaurant, near the post office when the affray occurred. It appears, however, from the statements of others, that she had no connection with the case.

Nelson's Statement

Nelson was detained by the police as a witness. He made a statement at police headquarters in the presence of his counsel, Mr. John A. Clarke, as follows:

"We met--that is, the man now lying in front of the city post office with his throat cut, his name is McMahon, and I--at Tip Hoy's restaurant on the west side of 11th street, below the avenue. This was between three and four o'clock this evening. The man who did the cutting (Hough) met us at Tip Hoy's, and remarked to McMahon, "I can down you," and McMahon retorted, "You can't down me." Whereupon they wrestled, and McMahon threw the assailant down upon the floor. We all left Tip Hoy's 'Shad' Campbell, Bill McMahon, the man who did th cutting, and myself. This was about 9:15 o'clock tonight. We walked down Pennsylvania avenue and turned into Louisiana avenue near the post office, and the man who did the cutting said to McMahon, "I will do you now," and simultaneously made a swipe with his hand toward McMahon's head, and immediately ran down Louisiana avenue toward 6th street, the southwest corner."

Death of McMahon

McMahon became conscious after being taken to the hospital, and when asked if he had cut himself shook his head. He sank again in a stupor from exhaustion, caused by loss of blood, and died about 4:50 o'clock this morning. Arrangements were made this morning for holding an inquest at two o'clock this afternoon.

The "Swiper" And His Victim

McMahon, the victim of the tragedy, came originally from Buffalo, where his mother resides. About two weeks ago he came to this city from Scranton, and has been employed occasionally in the composing room for the Post. His companions state that he was quiet and inoffensive, though addicted to drink.

Hough, who is charged with the murder, is a native of Alexandria, and has the reputation of being a quarrelsome and dangerous man when intoxicated. He left Alexandria about five years ago after cutting a man named Harman. He went south, and subsequently went to New York, where he worked at his trade. Recently he has been working in this city. He distinguished himself some time ago, it is charged, by shooting a colored man in Alexandria for refusing to drink, with him.

MacMahon's Body

was brought to the seventh precinct station from Providence hospital about 10 o'clock. It was encaised in a plain coffin. The body was placed in the lodger's room.

What Hough Says
Hough was taken to Police headquarters this morning and photographed for the rogues' gallery. A Star reporter saw him in his cell this morning at the station house. He was lying on his iron bunk as if asleep, but jumped up when the reporter called his name.

"I do not care to make any statement," he said to the reporter. "My attorney, Mr. Carrington, has advised me not to say anything."

"It is stated that you said you knew nothing about the cutting?" said the reporter.

"I know nothing about it. All I know is that I left him standing at the corner, and that I did not do the cutting."

"It is true that you had words with MacMahon?"

"We had a wrestle in Tip Hoy's, and he threw me. There were no angry words, except, Tip Hoy's who told him that he would put him out if he did not behave himself."

"You had been drinking pretty deeply?"

"Yes; I had been drinking yesterday afternoon. I know nothing about the woman named Hough who was arrested," continued the prisoner. "We have no relatives, except two nephews of mine in Baltimore. I came from Alexandria, where my people lived and my father is living now. I am not a desperado," continued Hough, referring to statements made about him. "When a man is in trouble the newspapers all give him a bad name."

Hough is not a bad-looking man. He is about 32 years old of medium height, and rather stout build. He has dark hair and moustache. He stated to a Star reporter that he had been working for Gibson Brothers for three years. Hough bears himself very coolly. When arrested the police found blood-stains on his cuffs and collar.

The Woman, Pearl Hough
Pearl Hough, the woman who was detained by the police in connection with the case, stated to a Star reporter that she knew none of the parties and nothing about the affair. She supposed at first that it was another McMahon that was killed and she made a remark that she had been talking with McMahon and that led to her arrest.

The Witness, Nelson
Nelson, who was taken as a witness last night, was kept at the police station until the inquest this afternoon. He declined to talk today, saying he had been advised not to. He said he had unfortunately been mixed up in the affair by force of circumstances. The statement which he made at police headquarters last night, he said, was about correct." He appeared to be considerably affected by his situation and by the sudden and enforced abstinence from stimulants after his dissipation.

Members of the Typographical Union were at the station this morning, arranging to take charge of the remains. Some friends of Hough's were there and declared it as not at all settled who did the cutting. The party were all intoxicated and no one was sure that Hough was guilty of the cutting. J.W. Campbell, who was one of the printers with Hough and McMahon, was summoned as a witness today. He said to a Star reporter that he knew nothing of the cutting, as he left the party before McMahon was cut.

A Bad Man Only When Drinking
At Gibson Bros. Printing establishment, a Star reporter was informed that Hough was an unusually steady workman and bore a good reputation. He was especially liked on account of his pleasant disposition. He left the office yesterday at five o'clock, perfectly sober, having first got a ten dollar bill changed. His bad traits showed themselves only when he had been drinking.

An Incident of the Tragedy
About half-past one o'clock a postal clerk arrived in the city post office, and Mr. Samuel Norris, of the registry division told him of the murder. While Norris was describing the pools of blood in which the murdered man lay, the postal clerk fainted and fell to the floor, upon which Norris cried for help. The watchman thought it was an alarm of fire, so he put on the hose, and was about to drench the building. The clerks in the registered letter room began to run out, thinking the murderer was in the building. The cause of the excitement was however soon discovered. The postal clerk was restored to consciousness, and the clerks returned to their work.
The Inquest

At two o'clock Coroner Patterson held the inquest. Josiah Simpson, Albert Connell, James H. Walker, L.R. Fechtig, W.N. Croggan and J.M. Eggleston were summoned as jurors. There was quite a large number of interested persons present at the station.

After the jury was sworn the body was taken in charge by Mr. Bellew, the undertaker, and removed to his establishment opposite. A telegram has been sent to the mother of the dead man, in New York but as yet no answer has been received as to her wishes.

Before taking testimony, Drs. Hartigan and Hicking made an autopsy.

The Hough-McMahon Homicide
Hough Committed to Jail--Funeral of the Dead Printer

The inquest over the body of William McMahon, the printer, who was killed Friday night, as it is charged, by George Hough, a fellow craftsman, was continued Saturday afternoon at the seventh precinct station after The Star's report closed. The testimony of Robert Hoy, in whose restaurant the deceased and Hough engaged in a wrestling match; Pearl Hough, who talked with McMahon before the tragedy, but knew nothing of the deed, and George C. Harris, the watchman who was present when Nelson brought McMahon to the city post office in a dying condition, was taken. Henry Hurley testified that he met these men on 9th street, one of whom was Nelson, and saw one of them sneak away. This man he thought did the cutting, but it was not Hough. Elmer McIntosh, who saw Nelson and McMahon at the post office, Dr. Hartigan, who made the postmortem examination, and Officers Bast and Schultze were also witnesses.

The jury returned a verdict that William McMahon came to his death at Providence Hospital on the 27th of September from his incised wounds of the neck, inflicted with a knife in the hands of George Hough. Hough was committed to jail.

McMahon's funeral took place yesterday from St. Aloysius church, Columbia Typographical Union No. 101 having charge of the ceremonies. The attendance was very large. Rev. Father Noonan officiated. The pall-bearers were Messrs. D.W. Beach, Ed. Morgan, Hector Davidson, S.J. Phillips, William Durkin and Adrian M. Jones, all members of the typographical union. The remains were placed in the receiving vault at Congressional cemetery, in preparation to being sent to the home of the deceased in New York state.

Obituary

Died, on Saturday afternoon last, at the Irving Hotel, in this city, General John McNeil, a distinguished officer of the War of 1812. His arrival from Boston, where he is Surveyor of the Port, as but just announced to us when we were apprised of his death. This was sudden and unexpected to us, though we since learn that he has long been declining, and suffered much from a painful and protracted illness. He was born in Hillsborough, New Hampshire, and at the time of his death was in the 66th year of his age. In 1812 he entered the army as a captain of infantry, and served with great distinction in that second war of independence. In 1814 he belonged to the first brigade, commanded by Gen. Scott, which opened a most glorious career of arms, in crossing the Niagara Straits and encountering the British veterans of the peninsular war. At the battle of Chippewa McNeil commanded the advance of Scott's brigade, the 11th regiment, Col. Campbell having been wounded in the early part of the action. In crossing the creek the leading regiment of the column encountered a most murderous fire, by which, in a few moments forty men were cut down. He advanced steadily on, with Jesup's regiment next, and at the distance of thirty paces from the enemy they deployed into line; McNeil, of herculean frame and stentorian voice, called aloud, "Give it to them--take vengeance on them, boys." And again, at the battle of Bridgewater, he had the honor to lead the celebrated Scott's brigade into action, in the face of a British battery of nine guns. In less than an hour the whole brigade was literally cut to pieces. As Ripley and Portel's brigades came into action McNeil redoubled his energies; when the 22d infantry broke, (its Colonel, Brady, having fallen,) McNeil rallied and reformed it. At this period of the action his horse was killed by a cannon ball and himself wounded in both legs by cannister shot, a six-ounce ball passing directly through his right knee. At the close of the war he was retained in the army, and served on the Lakes and the Mississippi till 1829, when he was appointed a commissioner to negotiate with the Sac and Fox Indians. At the conclusion of his mission he repaired to Washington, and subsequently resigned his appointment in the army, but only to serve his country in a civil capacity. He was appointed Surveyor of the Port of Boston, which office he filled till the day of his death.

The funeral of the deceased will take place on Tuesday afternoon; of the hour due notice will be given to the public.

Dr. McWilliams was born in St. Mary's county, Maryland. He entered the Navy in 1801, and, having served during the Tripolitan war, resigned in 1806; since which time he has resided in this city in the practice of his profession. He was the oldest living practitioner of medicine in Washington, as he would have been the oldest surgeon in the Navy, had he remained in that service.
In all the relations of life he was justly respected. He was ever among the most forward in all enterprises for the benefit of the city, or for the diffusion of knowledge. He was one of the founders of the Columbian Institute as well as the National Institute. He spent his life in the unostentatious exercise of the impulses of his generous and noble heart, and in the indulgence of his free and strong tastes for natural science.

The Funeral of the deceased will take place from his late residence, near the Navy Yard, at four o'clock p.m. today. Friends and acquaintances are invited to attend.

Doctor Alexander McWilliams was another well-known citizen of the Navy Yard section who deserves mention. He was a skillful practitioner, and was one of the founders in 1819 of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. His residence--on I Street between Sixth and Seventh--is still standing. One of Dr. McWilliam's daughters married the late Dr. Noble Young, so long known to the citizens of Washington.

It is only those who were acquainted with the amiable and exemplary character of this excellent lady, as a wife and a mother, who can appreciate the grief of her bereaved husband and family; and those to whom the other and recent domestic afflictions of this gentleman are known will feel for his last loss a double portion of sympathy. It is his unhappy lot to be able to say, with the poet--

> Insatiate archer! could not one suffice?
> Thy staff flew thrice, and thrice my peace was slain;
> And twice ere thrice yon moon had filled her horn.

The National Intelligencer, September 25, 1820
Died, on the 23d inst., aged 12 years, Master Clinton McWilliams, eldest son of Dr. Alexander McWilliams, of this city. The writer of this has witnessed that Providence, in gifting this youth with premature endowments of body and mind, with exemplary innocent of heart, amiable urbanity of manners, and a filial piety of rare occurrence, seemed to have destined him for the enjoyment of that happiness which the purest innocence only can enjoy. Be comforted, you afflicted parents! In raising so fair a flower to the fragrance and beauty of anticipated worth, you have given your country and your Creator in earnest, that your domestic happiness consists in fulfilling worthily your allotted destiny. Live and be consoled, for the most wise dispensations of an all-bountiful God! The friends and late school-fellows of the deceased are respectfully invited to attend his funeral at 10 o'clock, this morning.

Death of A.H. Meacham
Mr. A.B. Meacham died last evening at Dr. T.A. Bland's residence on G street, near 12th, after a few hours' illness of apoplexy. Arrangements were being made today to hold funeral services tomorrow, at 3 o'clock in the Metropolitan M.E. church, of which he was a member. The interment will be in the Congressional Cemetery. Mr. Meacham was born in Orange county, Indiana, in 1826, and moved with his family while a boy to Iowa. In 1855 he removed to Oregon, which state he represented in the electoral college in 1872. He was appointed a member of the Modoc commission by Gen. Grant, and in the massacre in which Gen. Canby lost his life received seven bullet wounds he devoted his life to the cause of the Indian. His last public service was on the Ute commission, of which he was a member when he died. He leaves a wife and son now in Oregon.

Agent Berry Takes Refuge with the Indians and Refuses to Surrender
Ounay, Oct. 14, via Lake City 17--The Indian agent of the Los Pinos has taken refuge in Chief Sapovonaris' camp and refuses to surrender himself. Meacham has taken up his abode in the military camp, fearing the vigilantes from Gunnison City. An officer has been at the agency five days trying to effect the capture of the prisoner who has sent him two communications promising to surrender, but so far has failed to do so. As soon as the papers were served on the agent he gave the information to the Utes, who collected at the bridge across the Uncompahgre river, five miles below the agency, in order to rescue the agent from the officers. By his remaining all night at the military camp the Indians were fooled and the prisoner made his escape. The agency is in charge of the blacksmith. The agent has telegraphed to Washington for instructions as to the question of surrendering. Cline is in jail at Gunnison. Hoyt is looking for a copper mine on the Utah trail, one hundred miles distant. Holmes passed through here since dark on horseback, attempting to escape by way of the Lake City trail. He was recognized by the sheriff of Ouray county, and a party started in pursuit. The people of Colorado express a determination to have the prisoner if it takes all winter. The citizens are clamoring for the removal of Meacham and Berry from their official positions. If the military will remain neutral, the people of the border counties feel confident of their ability to settle the difficulty without either state or national interference.

Russell were appointed a committee to prepare resolutions, which having been submitted to the commission, were adopted. The remains of the deceased have been enclosed in a zinc coffin and packed in a case with charcoal and deposited in a vault hewn in the mountainside, near Los Pinos agency, whence they will be removed to this city, the residence of his parents.

Other poems by Mrs. L.S. Burke and Mrs. Lydia Tilton were read. A feeling response was made to these tributes of Col. Meacham that touched the hearts of all present. Mr. J.L. McCreery, Rev. Dr. Adams and Mr. Ireland of Oregon, each contributed to the occasion, which closed with a sumptuous repast tendered by Mrs. Bland.

Entertaining the Indians
Social Reception to the Red Men
A novel but very pleasant affair was the reception given by Major and Mrs. F.P. Hill, at the Tremont House, to the Indian delegations there, last evening from 8 to 11 o'clock. Among the large company present were Hon. J.C.S. Blackburn; Hon. Alonzo Bell, Assistant Secretary of the Interior; Colonel Ainger, city postmaster; Major Harmon, deputy Second Auditor, and several officials from the Indian bureau.

The Red Men
present included Two Belly, Long Elk, Medicine Crow, Plenty Coos, Pretty Eagle and Old Crow, of the Crows, all in full and elaborate Indian costumes; Gabriel Reville, Drifting Goose, Left Hand, Jintayne and Smily Shepherd, of the Sioux, in citizens' dress, and Ten Day, Tishe, Tisdimits, Grouse Pete, Capt. Jim, Jack Gibson and Jack Ten Day, of the Shoshone and Bannocks, in full Indian costume. On taking seats they held quite a reception, assisted by the agents and interpreters.

Literary and Musical
Col. A.B. Meacham, as master of ceremonies then directed the exercises which consisted of music by Mrs. Applegate and Mrs. Culver; recitations by Master Buckley, Mrs. Parkhurst, of Lowell, "Emily Hawthorn" Mrs. Wells; Mr. Stephens, of the Interior department, and Mrs. Dr. Bland; and remarks by Mr. Blackburn and others. During the evening the Crows and Shoshones gave specimen songs, and the delegations were presented to the company and some of them made short addresses, which were interpreted to the audience.

Indian Taffy
Old Crow said: I am the Old Crow you have heard about, and I have heard about you good people every day where I live. I have seen plenty good people, but you art eh best I ever saw. Everything I see is pretty--pretty houses and women. Every house I see is better and better, and everything so nice I am ashed to take hold of it. But I'm not ashamed of any act I have ever done."

A Woman's Experience With The Sioux
Mrs. Fanny Kelly, who was for some time a prisoner of the Ogallalla Sioux was introduced, and she stated that she was treated by them with the greatest consideration and kindness, even while their children were starving. It was explained that while she was a prisoner, the "Sweet Lip Sioux," some of whom were present, attempted to buy her with a horse and send her to the white people. One of the other Indians with an exclamation of astonishment said "She worth two horses," an interruption which caused some laughter.

More Indian Talk
Drifting Goose said:--"I have been brought up to sing, and sing all night, but that is not what I have been thinking of. From what I have seen, I am ashamed of my old ways, and I want to go back and do as the white men do, I've got nothing but love for you all, and I want to shake hands with all of you." Centayne (the man that has a tail) and Left Hand also made addresses. The most interesting feature of the evening was a conversation between Old Crow, of the Crows, and Ten Day, of the Bannocks, in the sign language—a practical exemplification of the fact that there is among the uneducated a universal language. The gist of this conversation was that the Crows and Bannocks are friends, and friends of the white people too, etc. The entertainment was concluded with an elegant collation.

An Indian Council was held last night in the chapel of Lincoln Hall, under the supervision of Colonel Meacham. There were present: Colonel Adair and Mr. Ross, Cherokees; Judge Stidham, General Porter, and Mr. Hodge, Creeks; Colonel Brown, Seminole, and Captain Picket. Chief Joseph and Yellow Bull, Nez Perces, were also present, and made stirring addresses. There was a lively discussion on the transfer question. Remarks were made by Colonel Meacham, General Porter, Colonel Brown, Colonel Adair, and others.

The Indian Council Last Night
Lincoln Hall was well filled last night with an intelligent audience to listen to the talk of the Indian chiefs, Joseph and Yellow Bull of the Nez Perces, through their interpreters. Seated on the platform were Colonel A.B. Meacham, Mr. A.J. Chapman, Little Red, Chief William, Sam. Tom, Wass, and Unquipaquitz, of the Utes from the Los Pinos agency agency, Colorado, and U.M. Curtis, their interpreter; Colonel W.H. Adair and John Ross, of the Cherokees, and General Porter, of the Creeks. Colonel Meacham delivered a short address, explaining the object of the mission of these chiefs to this city, and then introduced Chief Joseph, who, through his interpreter, spoke for about forty minutes, detailing the experiences of his people in their recent conflicts with General Howard and the Utes in the Indian country and of the deceptions and cruelties practiced on them by the government after they had been driven out of their own country where they had been living for many generations. During the delivery of this account he was frequently applauded. Mrs. Dr. Bland read a poem on "Chief Joseph." Colonel W.P. Adair and General Porter made short addresses; after which Little Red, a Ute chief, was introduced, and made a brief speech, through his interpreter. A general hand shaking followed, the Indians appearing much delighted with the attention shown them.

Congress
The Senate had but a short session yesterday, yet an interesting one. We were gratified to see the move made by the enlightened Senator from California towards abrogating certain obnoxious laws in Kansas. Some conversation then ensued in regard to the resolution submitted by Mr. Clayton on Saturday last, when further proceeding on it was cut off by a message from the House of Representatives announcing the decease of the Hon. James Meacham, an esteemed member of the House from the State of Vermont. The message having been read, Mr. Foot, of Vermont, rose and pronounced an eloquent and impressive eulogy on the life and character of the lamented Representative, a full report of which is given under the appropriate head. Mr. Douglas (a native of Vermont) also paid a feeling tribute to the virtues of the deceased member; and then, in conformity to the resolutions unanimously adopted, the Senate adjourned.

In the House of Representatives the formal announcement of the death of the Hon. James Meacham, of Vermont, superseded all other proceedings for the day. Mr. Morrill, one of his colleagues, gave a graphic narrative of the most interesting events in the career of his gifted and much-respected friend, accompanied by a touching and eloquent tribute to his personal merits and public usefulness. Messrs. Howard, of Michigan, Etheridge, of Tennessee, Dickson, of New York, and Giddings, of Ohio, followed in well-conceived and feeling remarks; and the House adjourned, after adopting the customary resolutions of respect and condolence.

Suicide By Shooting
Francis S. Mead, Canal Employee Takes His Own Life
No One Able to Assign a Cause--Deceased Was a Batchelor and Lived Alone
Francis S. Mead, harbormaster of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, committed suicide early this morning by shooting himself in the head. He had previously attempted self-destruction by inhaling illuminating gas.

The fatal shot was fired shortly before 7 o'clock and Mead died at the Georgetown University Hospital about two hours later. The dead was committed in a small room on the third floor of the Farmers and Mechanics Bank building at the corner of 31st and M streets northwest.

Mead was a morose temperament. His actions of late, while somewhat unusual, did not excite the suspicions of his friends. He was a bachelor, and practically lived the life of a recluse. For the past few days he spent but little time at his boarding house, 1219 32d street, and has not been regular in taking his meals at the place.

He has also remained away from home several nights. He arose early yesterday morning and left his home without eating his breakfast or telling his landlady, Mrs. Henry, when he might be expected to return.

From what can be learned he attended to his duties as harbormaster yesterday. Nothing is known of his movements after he had completed his duties for the day. He did not, however, spend the night at his home, but this fact did not cause any uneasiness to Mrs. Henry, as he had remained away all night at intervals previously.

It was stated by Mrs. Henry that Mead had been drinking heavily recently, but no notice was taken of it, as he was a man who attended strictly to his own business. It is understood that he returned to the office of the canal company late last night and slept there. He was seen walking about the third floor of the building at 6:30 o'clock this morning by Mr. William M. Smith, an employee of the Georgetown post office, as the latter was going to his place of employment.

The Discovery Made
Within a half hour thereafter George Patterson, the janitor of the canal company's offices, arrived at the building. The outside door was locked and everything was in proper order. The odor of gas was detected in the hallway, however, and Patterson began an investigation. In the bookkeeping room the gas was discovered to be turned on full force in an unlighted stove, and the fumes were very strong.

After turning off the gas and opening the doors to air the room, Patterson went upstairs to the portion of the building over the bank. In an ante-room adjoining the office of several of the officials of the company the unconscious form of Mead was found. His body was lying on a lounge and his feet rested on the floor.

Upon seeing the revolver on the floor and the blood flowing from the back of Mead's head, Patterson ran into the street and summoned aid. Policemen J.G. Walsh and J.S. Custer of the seventh precinct station were near by and quickly responded. The officers made an examination. They found a hole almost three-quarters of an inch in diameter immediately back of Mead's right ear. The pistol lying on the floor was found to be of .44 caliber, and resembled the bulldog pattern.

Conveyed to Hospital
The patrol of the seventh precinct station was summoned and Mead was conveyed to the Georgetown University Hospital with all possible speed. He was immediately placed on the operating table and the physicians did what they could, though the unfortunate man died shortly after 8 o'clock without regaining consciousness.

Nothing that would throw light on the tragedy was found on Mead's body or in the room in which he fired the fatal shot. No one could be found that would advance a cause for the rash act. Mrs. Henry, his landlady, was at an utter loss to explain the suicide. She stated that Mead had boarded with her for fourteen years. The loss of his mother several years ago, it is thought, preyed on his mind.
Mead was a lifelong employee of the canal company. His father, John W. Mead, who was also employed by the canal company, was killed, May 30, 1877, at the outlet lock through an accident caused by a derangement of the machinery which was used in letting the boats from the canal into the Potomac river. Mead was fifty-four years of age, and is survived by a sister, Mrs. Perkins, and a brother, both of whom reside at 1600 New Jersey avenue northwest.

Frightful Disaster in Georgetown -- The Outlet Lock Gives Way
Mr. J.W. Mead Killed and Two Men Injured

A terrible and fatal accident occurred this morning at 10 o'clock at the new outlet lock, a mile above the Aqueduct bridge, in Georgetown, by which Mr. John W. Mead, assistant harbor master of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, was instantly killed, and two employees -- Sylvester Carroll, aged 17 years, and Michael Reynolds, aged 60 years, were severely if not fatally injured, the former having both legs broken and sustaining an injury to his left arm, and the latter having his right leg crushed below the knee. Carroll resides at Foxhall's place, near Green Springs, and Reynolds at the corner of 1st and Lingan streets, Georgetown.

Particulars of the Accident

The facts in the case, so far as they could be ascertained by our reporter, are as follows: A canal boat loaded with coal was passed into the caisson at this outlet, preparatory to being lowered into the river. The caisson is lowered on a railway and inclined plane at an angle of about thirty degrees, and for counter weight two cars loaded with two hundred and fifty tons of stone are placed on rails each side the caisson. As the caisson, loaded, goes down toward the river these cars ascend. Some slight signs of weakness were noticed in the machinery this morning while the caisson with its boat was being lowered, and the attention of the person in charge of the engine having been called to it, he immediately and suddenly brought the engine to a stop. It is supposed that this sudden stoppage caused an unnatural strain on the ropes, breaking them and precipitating the cars and caisson to the foot of the railways. The boat was not injured, and passed to the river with its occupants in safety. One of the cars in the descent struck Mr. Mead, who was walking behind it in its ascent, and when the ropes broke he had not time to get out of its course. It is supposed that the other sufferers were injured by the ropes, which were of 1 3/4 inch steel wire. The cars were completely demolished, and the entire machinery is more or less injured. Large cog-wheels of cast iron, bolts, rods and bars are scattered over the scene in great confusion.

The Body of Mr. Mead was recovered with difficulty, it being covered by the debris to a depth of four or five feet. His right leg was terribly mangled, and he had a severe cut penetrating the skull. He was injured internally.

Mr. Mead was an old and respected citizen of Capitol Hill, and with his family resided on 6th street, near B, southeast. He was an iron worker by trade, and for the past two or three years had been employed in the canal office at Georgetown and on the Georgetown division of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. He was about 55 years of age, and in old times was active in the volunteer fire department, and was also a member of the old Washington Light Infantry. He represented the fifth ward several times in the board of common council and for many years was assessor of the ward.

Cause of the Accident -- It appears that a safety brake had been removed from the caissons several days since, and for some reason had not been replaced. Two boats passed in safety this morning through the outlet, and no cause is assigned for the accident which overtook the third boat.

The Wounded Men -- Michael Reynolds was sent to Providence Hospital and Sylvester Carroll was taken to his home. Both were attended by Dr. Ritchie. The accident will be a serious drawback to the company, as most of the machinery is completely wrecked.

The Evening Star, May 31, 1877
The Disaster at the Outlet Lock -- Death of Another Victim

Yesterday evening the scene of the Outlet Lock accident, noticed in The Star, was visited by large number of persons. The body of Mr. John W. Mead was taken to the third precinct station house, and Dr. Patterson, the coroner, after viewing it, directed the police to summon a jury to appear this evening. The young man, Sylvester Carroll, was removed to his father's residence, on the Foxhall place and attended by Doctors Taylor, Lewis Mackrall, Bowie Taylor, Lewis Ritchie and James Mackall. After consultation it was decided that the only chance for his life lay in the amputation of both legs. One was taken off just above the ankle joint, and the other below the knee joint, but he survived the amputation only about one hour. Michael Reynolds was found to have sustained a compound fracture of the right leg, and severe injuries in the back. He was removed by Sanitary Officer Connell to the Providence hospital, where the amputation of the crushed leg was performed.
The Cause of the Accident
Mr. City, the engineer in charge, gives the following account of the accident. A few minutes before the accident occurred his attention was called by the peculiar motion of the brace between two of the sheaves, (wheels around which is the heavy iron chain works), but could not detect the cause of the trouble. His assistant, seeing his movement, and fearing something was wrong, began gradually to shut off the water, so that there was no sudden stoppage of the engine, nor is it iron rope broken at all, nor is it broken at the present time. Mr. City says he is also prepared to prove that the absence of the safety shoe brake was not the cause of the accident; because the shoe brake was by experiment found entirely inadequate to stop the counter weights if they had a start of only a few feet. It was only of value in case the weight jumped backwards--it was therefore abandoned--and in its stead men with chocks followed the weights, which work two of the men were doing at the time of the accident. It may then be asked why did they not stop the weights? The iron rope which pulls up the caisson, weights, etc., works around three large sheaves, (wheels,) which are fastened by heavy plates in solid masonry. This masonry, which fastened the journal of the wheel, broke first, the canting of that caused the rope to jump to the next smaller wheel, and when the rope struck the smaller wheel it broke it, and tore it away from the masonry. This made a slack rope--the weights then went at full speed beyond the power of the men whose duty it was to chock the weights. The cause then of the accident was either a weak plate in the wheel, which is fastened in the masonry, or a defect in the masonry itself.

Remarkable Presence of Mind
Many have asked, very sensibly, why it was that the canal boat and its occupants in the caisson escaped? It was all owing to the presence of mind of an employee at the lock, Mr. John W. Carroll, who, before the actual occurring of the catastrophe, seemed to know what was coming, and without any orders opened the gate of the caisson, and when the shock came the rebound shoved the boat on safely out into the river. The caisson was much strained and bent. This lock was built by Mr. H.A. Ramsey & Co. The coroner at half-past one o'clock went to the lock, and upon his return an inquest will be held at the station house.

The Evening Star, Friday, June 1, 1877
The Outlet Lock Disaster -- Death of the Third Victim of the Tragedy
Michael Reynolds, who was injured by the disaster at the outlet lock in Georgetown on Wednesday, and was taken to Providence hospital for treatment, died there yesterday, making the third victim of the accident. The Coroner's inquest over the body of Mr. J.W. Mead, who was killed outright by the accident (Sylvester Carroll, the second victim, died Wednesday night) was commenced at 1 o'clock yesterday, at the police station in Georgetown.

The first witness--Mr. Henry W. Denmead, superintendent of the canal company at the lock, testified that he had orders to assist Mr. City; that he turned over all the men at his disposal, and notified them that they were under the orders of Mr. City, who proceeded with the work, and put the first and second boats safely through the lock. The accident occurred on letting the third one through. Witness first noticed the unusual speed of the cables, and he made a remark about it to Mr. Mead, who was with him, and expressed his belief that something was wrong. Mr. Mead stepped on the counter-weight track, and witness caught hold of him and pulled him back to the main track, saying it was the safest place to be. Mr. Mead again stepped on the counter track, when witness again pulled him back, saying at the same time, "for God's sake, stay here." Witness was struck on the finger by a piece of flying material, and turning to see what it was, let go his hold on Mead and lost sight of him; next saw the rope throwing young Carroll against the counter weight, which knocked him down; saw Reynolds struck by the same rope; the counter rope sunk under Carroll, and the accident was all over; believes that the breaking of the keeper was the cause of the accident; as a machinist and mechanic he thought the wheels sufficiently strong; had the keeper been of wrought iron it would have lessened the chances of accident; the breaks had been used, but were taken off; had they been on they would have prevented the accident; the counter weights are about two hundred tons in weight, and the caisson and boat weigh about the same.

Mr. C.W. City, the superintendent of the contractors, testified that he was employed by H.A. Ramsey & Co., and was in charge at the time of the accident; was near the wheels (sheafs) at the time of the accident, and observed that the brace was vibrating more than it had ever done previously; as two journals of the sheaves had broken previously, he naturally looked for similar accidents; the great sudden jar was what caused the accident; had the bases been braced at the bottom the accident might have been avoided; as a machinist, witness considered it necessary to watch those large sheaves closely; on account of accidents having happened he was naturally suspicious; Mr. Ramsey had the contract for the work, but had been told there was nothing to be done without consulting Mr. Hutton, the chief engineer of the canal company; there had been no conflict between Mr. Hutton and witness; he took the brakes off about three weeks ago; Mr. Ramsey was present; it was a perfect Godsend that the brakes were not on; had they been on, the caisson would have been ruined and every one on the boat and caisson would have been injured; the brakes would have ripped out and would not have stopped the counter-weight trucks. Adjourned until this afternoon.

Mechlin, Dr. Joseph

d. 6 Feb 1839  R49/110
The National Intelligencer, February 13, 1839
On Wednesday, the 6th instant, in the city of New York, Joseph Mechlin, M.D., eldest son of Joseph Mechlin, Esq. of this city. To his immediate relatives, and, indeed, to all who knew him, he was endeared by his affectionate disposition and by the correctness of his deportment. About ten years ago he was appointed by the Board of Managers of the American Colonization Society colonial physician; and, on the death of Dr. Randall, whose brief course was marked with great efficiency, he received his commission as Governor of the colony. In discharging the duties of that difficult station—and he faithfully discharged them—his health became impaired, nor did he ever appear to have regained what he thus lost in Africa. Some time after his return to the United States, he removed to Mobile, and there entered on a professional career, which his talents, his acquirements, and his habits promised to render eminently successful. But, while exerting his skill to relieve others, disease seized upon himself and brought him low; and the only ground, under Providence, on which to rest the hope of his recovery, seemed to be a visit to his native place, and to his father's house, every member of which was tenderly attached to him. But, on the day after his arrival in New York, they lost a son—a brother; and his young and accomplished wife, who had nursed him with an affection which none but a wife can know, was made a widow.

Dr. M. had enjoyed the advantage of early religious instruction, and, in a letter to one of his sisters (the last he ever wrote) he intimated, in reference to his contemplated visit, his impression that it would be the last time they would ever meet on earth, "but," he added, "if we believe as we have been taught, we shall meet in another world." In that world "the inhabitant shall no more say I am sick;" and there death shall never come.

Death of Mr. Meehan.
Yesterday afternoon, Mr. John Silva Meehan, ex-Librarian to Congress, died suddenly at his residence on south B street, Capitol Hill. Mr. Meehan was a native of New York, and had reached the advanced age of seventy-three years. In early life he was connected with the press, and at one time conducted a Democratic paper in the city, which was taken in charge by Duff Green when Mr. Meehan (during the first term of President Jackson) was appointed Librarian of Congress, which position he so acceptably filled for the space of thirty-three years. His funeral will take place from his late residence tomorrow afternoon.

Source??
John Silva Meehan, printer, publisher, and Librarian of Congress, was born in New York City on February 6, 1790, and was educated there. He went to Burlington, New Jersey, in 1811 or 1812, to take part in the printing of Richard S. Coxe's New Critical Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language; but in January 1815 was back in New York City, where he was warranted as a midshipman in the United States Navy. Assigned to serve aboard the Brig Firefly, he remained with that vessel until April, the restoration of peace with Great Britain having thwarted plans to cruise in the West Indies in pursuit of enemy commerce. He was offered a commission in the Marine Corps but chose to take up printing again and moved to Philadelphia. There, with Robert Anderson, Meehan began publishing a Baptist journal in 1818. After moving to Washington in 1822, the two began publishing a weekly newspaper, The Columbian Star, also under Baptist auspices.

In 1826, Meehan turned to the publication of a political journal and acquired the Washington Gazette. Renamed The United States' Telegraph, the newspaper was friendly to Andrew Jackson and John C. Calhoun. However, it soon became apparent that Meehan was not mounting the desired type of attack against the Adams administration, and the Telegraph was taken over by the dynamic and forceful Duff Green. After leaving the Telegraph, Meehan served for a time as secretary of the Board of Trustees of Columbian College. He is also said to have continued his support during this period for the election of Jackson in 1828.

On May 28, 1829, Meehan was appointed by Jackson as the fourth Librarian of Congress. Eminent on acceptable the score of his pat political loyalty, he was nevertheless careful throughout his long incumency to avoid partisan activity. George Watterston (q.v.), whom he replaced, had been less so, and resorted unsuccessfully to a press campaign to set aside Meehan's appointment. For years thereafter, Watterston used threats, cajolery, and flattery in vain attempts to regain his former position.

Meehan was 39 years old when he became Librarian. He was 5 feet 7 inches tall, had brown hair, brown eyes, and a complexion tending toward the florid. By most accounts he was amiable, gentlemanly, precise, anxious to be of service, and a good businessman. The Library that he took over occupied the greater part of the central portion of the western front of the United States Capitol. Some 16,000 volumes reposed there, carefully arranged on shelves in the Library's alcoves according to the classification scheme inherited from Thomas Jefferson (q.v.). Meehan began his career in the Library with one assistant and gradually increased his staff to five, including his son, Charles Henry Wharton Meehan, who later was placed in charge of the Library's law department. The Librarian's salary was $1,500 in 1829 and eventually rose to $2,160. During Meehan's last year the Library (1861), the total appropriation was $17,000.

Two opportunities were presented, in 1836 and 1844, which, if acted upon, would have set the Library of Congress upon a course toward becoming the first library of the land. The first of these involved an offer to purchase the library, famed throughout Europe, of Count Dimitrii Petrovich Buturlin. The price for this unique collection, consisting of 25,000 volumes and a number of valuable manuscripts, was in the range of $50,000 to $60,000, well below its true value. Although the support of the Joint Committee on the Library was given, a resolution favorable to the purchase of the Buturlin Library was rejected on the floor of the Senate. The loss of the Buturlin Library also had the effect of serving as a precedent for the rejection in 1844 of an offer to purchase the 10,000-volume library of the Durazzo family in Italy, considered one of the choicest private libraries in Europe. For all practical purposes, notice had been given that the Library of Congress was to remain a legislative library and that proponents of a national library would have to look elsewhere.

Meehan appears to have played no role in the attempt to acquire these two collections. This passivity was in keeping with his view of the Librarian as a creature of Congress, whose bidding he was always careful to do. Meehan's most significant encounters, understandably, were with the members of the Joint Committee and particularly with its chairman. In 1845, at a time when the Library was described in a guide book as consisting of "about forty thousand volumes, in a large and elegant room, and disposed in order by an excellent librarian," Senator James Alfred Pearce of Maryland came to the Committee. An era of extraordinarily close collaboration between Pearce and Meehan was thereby inaugurated, although there was never any question of the deferential nature of this relationship. Pearce, in fact, must thenceforth be considered as the dominant figure in Library affairs.

The legislation establishing the Smithsonian Institution in 1846 contained an interesting provision relating to federal copyright law that had the potential of greatly enriching the Library's collections. According to this provision, one copy of each book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving produced in the United States was to be placed in the Library of Congress. However, the implementation of this grand scheme for building national library resources was hindered by practical difficulties and impeded by differences of opinion. The legislation itself was faulty because it failed to provide Meehan with any means of compelling copyright deposits to be made, and, furthermore, the actual validity of a copyright did not appear to depend on a deposit. Meehan, who had many routine duties to perform and who found the processing of copyright deposits burdensome, did what was expected of him but was otherwise unenterprising. In 1859, the copyright provision, insofar, as it involved the Library of Congress, was repealed.

The most dramatic event of Librarian Meehan's long incumbency occurred on December 24, 1851. Sometime before 8 o'clock on that morning, the Library Room was reported to be on fire, and in a few hours' time it was almost totally destroyed. An estimated 35,000 volumes were lost, including two-thirds of Jefferson's library; some 20,000 volumes, many of which were housed in adjoining rooms, were saved. A few buckets of water would have been enough to extinguish the flames at the outset, but the rapid and extensive spread of the fire soon carried the situation beyond all control. No blame was ever attached to Meehan for the catastrophe, and plans were made almost immediately for the reconstruction of the Library Room and the acquisition of the books to stock it. Congress responded in both instances, voting special appropriations that eventually amounted to $85,000 for the purchase of books and $93,000 for the restoration of the Library Room. On July 6, 1853, Meehan took formal possession of the restored Library Room. On July 6, 1853, Meehan took formal possession of the restored Library, thought by some to be one of the most beautiful rooms in the world. Meehan was preoccupied over the next few years with replacing the lost books, but for the most part, he moved cautiously, relying upon the Library's earlier catalogs in preparing his want lists, and dealing almost exclusive with the firm of Rich Brothers in London. Some opportunities were presented for enlarging the Librarian's powers at this time, but Meehan preferred to follow the more modest tradition of working closely within the framework of the Library Committee. As a result of the special appropriations of 1852 and annual appropriations of $5,000 thereafter, the Library grew rapidly in the years after the fire, and in April 1856, Meehan was able to announce to Senator Pearce that 36,000 volumes from those catalog-based want lists had been purchased and that the losses had been entirely made good.

The international exchange of duplicate library materials as a means of enlarging and enhancing the collections of the Library of Congress was first promoted before Congress in 1840. The idea originated with Alexandre Vattemare (q.v.), a French citizen who had already achieved some success with this form of cooperation in Europe. He found favor with Congress, and Meehan was authorized to participate. However, the Librarian, who held a low opinion of Vattemare and believed in more traditional channels of acquisition, did not actively prosecute the international exchange program. Vattemare returned to the United States in 1848 and broached more ambitious plans, for which he again received congressional approval. The program now began to show some results, but growing distrust of Vattemare (not only by Meehan but by other American librarians and by French officials as well) and the poor quality of some of the materials received through Vattemare's agency led in 1853 to the abandonment of the exchange program.

Four printed catalogs of the contents of the Library were prepared by Meehan and his staff--in 1830 (258p.), 1839 (747p.), 1849 (1022p.), and 1861 (1398p.). A number of supplementary catalogs issued in intervening years tended to add to the cumbrousness of a system based on the increasingly outmoded Jeffersonian classifications. Although Meehan never undertook it himself, one attempt was made at the Library of Congress in 1853 to carry out a wholesale reformation of cataloging through the preparation fo stereotype plates for titles of the volumes in the Library. The brainchild of Charles C. Jewett (q.v.), librarian of the Smithsonian Institution, this system, by eventually taking account of the catalogs of other libraries, was promoted as a means toward central, uniform cataloging. Appropriations failed, however, and Jewett, who had continued to guide the stereotyping program, was dismissed from the Smithsonian in 1854. Lacking such essential support, the program soon faltered and came to a close.

Meehan experienced few serious threats of removal during his many years as Librarian. It had been his practice to remain cautiously non-political throughout his public life, and he had his record of survival to show how successful he had been. With the election of Lincoln in 1860, however, Meehan found himself in a difficult position. Senator Pearce, with whom he was so closely identified, had left the Whig party in 1856 to become a National Democrat. Although Pearce was a Unionist, he was also a Marylander, representing a state that was generally pro-Southern, and he found himself unable to declare boldly and clearly for the Union. As far as the Library of Congress was concerned, this meant a diminution of the chairman's influence. As far as John Silva Meehan was concerned, it meant the end of his long career. Although there were rumors of pro-Southern sympathies on the part of Meehan, no evidence exists to this effect. Ainsworth Rand Spofford (q.v.) later was to say that Meehan had been removed only because he was "a very ancient fossil." Senator Pearce tried to intervene with Lincoln in Meehan's behalf, but o no avail, and John G Stephenson (q.v.), an Indiana physician, replaced him on May 24, 1861. Meehan took his dismissal calmly and without rancor.

His retirement was not entirely untroubled, for his successor prepared an elaborate report for the Joint Committee detailing the shortcomings of the Library. Beyond the criticism leveled at him at the conclusion of his almost 32-year administration, some has followed him throughout the years, based on the broad grounds that Meehan and those others who had influence and authority in Library matters were willing to settle for too little. The history of the Library over the period 1829-1861 appears to be a chronicle of lost opportunities, opportunities for the enhancement of the Library through international and domestic exchanges, through the vigorous observance of copyright provisions, through timely special purchases, and by other means as well. Vision, imagination, and vigor seemed to be lacking, particularly concerning matters that by their very nature would have placed the Library on the road to becoming a true national library. Yet, given the reality of the situation which involved the general apathy of Congress where Library affairs were concerned and which must take account of the measured manner in which the powerful Senator Pearce controlled the Library, it is not so surprising that it was, and remained, a legislative library, the kind of library that Congress wanted.

Meehan survived in retirement for approximately two years, dying of apoplexy at his home on Capitol Hill on April 24, 1863. An obituary noted that "he was remarkably punctual and assiduous in his duties, unobtrusive, moral, and domestic in his habits, and of sterling integrity as a man." He had been married twice, first in 1814 to Margaret Jones Monington, who died in 1826, shortly after the birth of their seventh child; and then to his wife's sister, Rachele T. Monington, in October 1827. Rachel bore him two children. Only three of Meehan's children are known to have survived him.

Held for Grand Jury

Edward Lacy Before a Coroner’s Inquest

Responsible for the Death of Frank A. Merrill in August Last

Edward Lacy, seventeen years old, who shot and fatally injured Frank Alvin Merrill the 23rd day of August last, as heretofore printed in The Star, was held for the action of the grand jury at an inquest at the morgue this morning. Lacey, who was rearrested Friday night when it was thought Merrill was dying, was at the inquest this morning with counsel, Attorney Albert Sillers. His father was also present at the hearing.

Edward Maxwell, who was with Lacey the night the shooting occurred, was an important witness in the case. He explained to the jury how Merrill had tried to start a fight when he met the witness, Lacey and two young ladies at a dance given at Beucheler’s garden, on the Bladensburg road. He also told the coroner and jury of how the police prevented a fight and of how Lacey tried to get so far away from Merrill that the latter could not assault him.

Maxwell told of a second meeting at a Chinese restaurant on 9th street and of the part a policeman took in the affair there. Merrill, he stated, was started toward his home by a policeman, but instead of going home he hurried around the corner, overtook them at 9th and D streets and renewed the fight that resulted in his death. Deputy Coroner Glazebrook explained that death was caused by an injury to the brain, a small piece of the skull having penetrated the brain matter. Dr. White, the resident physician at the Emergency Hospital, told of the wounded man being under treatment at the hospital three times. The last time he was there he died. His condition indicated that he was suffering from depression.

Elmer Houch, 614 15th street northeast, testified hat he had known Merrill since March last, but did not know Lacey prior to the night the trouble occurred. While at the park on the Bladensburg road, he stated, Merrill tried to start a fight with Lacey and his companion. Merrill was ordered out of the place by a policeman, and it was as much as witness could do to get him out. Merrill told witness that he (Merrill) was looking for trouble, and that if he met the men outside he would give them all that was coming to them. Witness said they came to the city on a wagon and got something to drink.

“Do you know Rose Davis?” the coroner asked witness.

“Yes, sir,” he answered, “I know her from meeting her at the dancing school.”

“And do you know Edith Yost?”

Met at Chinese Restaurant

Witness explained that the party met at a Chinese restaurant on 9th street, where they had words, and Merrill struck Rose Davis. A policeman prevented further trouble there and ordered the party to disperse. Merrill said to witness: “I’m going to get that fellow, and if you are a friend of mine you’ll stick to me.”

Merrill then ran around 8th street and headed off Lacey, Maxwell and the two girls at 9th and D streets. He said to Maxwell: “You are with my girl,” and struck him. Then he went after Lacey and the latter shot him. Houck told the jury that the police arrested Maxwell, and when witness told him he had the wrong man the policeman struck at him with his club, and told him he wanted no “butting in.”

Edith Yost, living at No. 10 Minnesota avenue, told of her visit to the dance at Beucheler’s Garden and of the trouble Merrill had there. He spoke to Rose Davis about a picture, she said, and when trouble started the police sent them out. Witness told of what happened from then until the time they reached the Chinese restaurant. There Merrill renewed the trouble and the police again took a hand in it. She related the story of the meeting at 9th and D streets. While in front of the Chinese restaurant, she stated, Lacey exhibited a revolver and said he thought that would prevent trouble. Witness left the party at Pennsylvania avenue and 9th street and had started home when she heard the reports of two pistol shots.

Rose Davis, 316 Lincoln street, Anacostia, gave similar testimony.

“Merrill didn’t go with me,” she stated, in response to a question asked by the coroner, “but I knew him a long time ago when he lived near the cemetery on 13th street.

Witness said she and her companion, Edith Yost, had become acquainted with Lacey and Maxwell on Pennsylvania avenue the night before the shooting occurred. She was surprised when they appeared at the dance the next night. Merrill was at the dance and had a girl with him. Trouble started in the park because Merrill wanted to fight Lacey and Maxwell.

“Was he jealous?” she was asked.

“No sir.”

“What was the trouble?”

“It was just his disposition.”

Miss Davis told of the conduct of Merrill the several times he came up and tried to cause trouble, and said that Merrill showed the revolver in front of the Chinese restaurant. He said he thought that might prevent trouble. She said she had left the party when the last row started and did not see the shooting, but heard the reports of the weapon. This closed the testimony and the case was submitted. Merrill’s body was removed to the home of his parents, 509 6th street northwest, from where the funeral will take place tomorrow morning.

The Evening Star, December 6, 1882
- The Killing of Wm. Messer
- The Coroner's Inquest Today
- The killing of Wm. Messer, by an engine of the B & P railroad on 6th street last evening, is mentioned elsewhere in this paper.

The Coroner's Inquest
- The inquest was held at the first precinct station at 11 o'clock today by Dr. D.W.C. Patterson, the coroner, the following being the jurors: W.A. Barnes, J. Harrison Johnson, C.H. Parker, John H. Wise, G.W. Smithson and Henry Steinbach. The first witness was Charles Frere. Mr. E.D. Wright, as counsel, stated he had been requested by the family to be present, and asked if there was any objection to his presence. He was told that there was not.

Mr. Frere testified that he was a brakeman, and as he was coming down on the car about fifteen minutes past 7 o'clock, he saw the deceased about ten or fifteen feet from him, as he judged, on the track; called to him "get off the track." or something to the same effect, at the same time putting on his brake. Deceased paid no attention to him, and continued to walk in the middle of the track till the car struck him, walking right up to it. This was just at the entrance to the yard. Two young ladies, and he thought a young man passed over the track, ahead of him some distance; was not certain whether the engine had hold of the cars at the time or not; it had hold of two baggage cars.

By Jurors--There is no watchman at this point, it not being a street crossing. Witness could not have pushed him away, and did all he could to stop the car by the brakes. Witness did not know that the cars were detached from the engine or not. The man was struck right in the breast, and was inside of the curb line at the time. Don't know that there ever was a watchman at this point. It might be advisable to have a watchman there for some reasons and not for others.
Mr. Wright asked if it was not impossible for a man to walk three feet in the middle of the track from the center of where the pavement should be.

At this point the jurors expressed a desire to personally inspect the place, including the tracks.

On returning Charles Strobel, a switchman, testified to seeing deceased about the same time Frere did, and Charles Kline, an expressman, to seeing the accident, and that, deceased seemed to be oblivious to any danger.

The Verdict
The jury found a verdict that Messer came to his death about 7 o'clock p.m. on the 5th instant, near the crossing on 6th street and Baltimore and Potomac depot, on the sidewalk, by being run over by a baggage car coming in the depot attached to the switching engine. The jury believe, from evidence adduced, that the company was negligent in not having a flag-man at the crossing. If the company had exercised due precaution the accident would not have happened.

The deceased was a blacksmith by trade, but of late years had been engaged in the wholesale grocery business as a drummer. He leaves a widow and one child.

Having already attained an enviable position in the professional and business world his unusual ability is proven, and this in connection with his record as a capable and painstaking officer in the several Masonic bodies, gives assurance of a satisfactory and brilliant administration of the office of Grand Master, to which, in the natural course of events, he may attain at an age which would rank him with the little coterie of men who have realized that ambition while comparatively young.

<td>Yesterday, Mr. Isaac Miller, one of the persons arrested at the Arsenal, was released from jail. Mr. M. is an old resident of the city, and for many years has been in the employ of the Government. His son, Dr. A.W. Miller, is said to be one of the officials in the army of the “Southern Conthedveracy” as Artemus Ward calls it, while a more sensible son is on the other side. The investigating committee did not design that the military arrest should be made, though it was certainly made upon the testimony they were in possession of. It is claimed by Mr. Miller’s friends that he is a loyal citizen, and as such he subscribed readily to the oath of allegiance.</td>

| Editor of the Evening Star: I ask a sufficient space in your columns that I may render some service to an injured man. In your local notice of “the discoveries made by the Select Committee of the House of Representatives, investigating the condition of the various Departments,” you say there was “ample testimony of the sympathy of certain employees at the United States Arsenal with the rebellious States, and of their hostility to the United States Government,” and that Isaac Miller and eight others of those employees were arrested and committed to jail by Justice Donn.

Yes, sir, here in the capital of this free Government, in the middle of the nineteenth century, an aged citizen, who for nearly forty years has served the Federal Government with the utmost fidelity, who has spent that period of a long, useful and Christian life at the post assigned him in that Arsenal with an unceasing and faithful devotion to his duties that has obtained for him the highest encomiums from those under whom he has served, was suddenly seized, marched like a felon to the common jail, and there incarcerated as though he was a thief or a burglar.

He was not permitted to know the accusations against him, nor who had preferred them; but in the quiet performance of his public duties, he was petrified with astonishment at the announcement that he was a prisoner, and that without bail or main prize, he must like thief or a vagrant enter behind the prison gates. Suddenly torn from a tender and devoted family—ignominiously stripped of the domestic associations and the united domestic worship of a family altar, at which he had nightly communed with his Maker for almost a generation, he, at an age exceeding the scriptural limit of three score years and ten, was compelled for once to address that Being from the damp dungeon of criminals. And how was this wicked and cruel persecution brought about? He is paragraphed in the city papers as though he was a mere vagabond, under the significant caption, “In Jail,”—and the public who have been thus informed of that arrest, shall also be informed of his release, and of the outrage that has been committed upon as loyal a citizen, as true a patriot, and as pure a Christian as has ever adorned the community and the church.

It has resulted wholly through the black plague of American politics—office-seeking—place hunting. Application had been made for his removal from the position which he has so worthily and so profitably to the Government, filled through all the changes and vicissitudes of party and political fortune. The application failed because of his value to the Government. But the savage ferocity of political lust knew no limits. The disappointed applicants availed themselves of the necessary secrecy of the inner chamber of a Congressional inquest, and there, by means of that gigantic iniquity, false swearing, gave him the cowardly and dastardly stab which the highwayman deals to his unsuspecting victim. They swore that he had justified the assault upon the U.S. troops to the city of Baltimore on the 19th of April—that he had asserted that the aggressions upon the South had been such that they were driven to take up arms against the Government—and that he had rejoiced at the disaster at Bull Run, and wished for a like result to all future engagements.

Not one of the creatures who swore to this dare to meet their victim face to face and repeat their perjury. He has not only not used the language ascribed, but has never uttered a sentiment from which any such inference can be drawn. Throughout the whole contest, his loyalty to the Government has been as firm and unshaken as that of the President himself or the General-in-Chief of the army. Like the true Christian patriot which he has always been, he has adhered with unswerving fidelity to that Government to which he has been so valuable.

His honored pastor, the newly-elected Chaplain to the Senate, in company with other near and dear relatives and friends, promptly commenced the task of restoring this persecuted old gentleman to his home and family. It was at once ascertained from the committee that even the testimony taken, did not contain a single allegation which could lead to his arrest, and that the committee were surprised and confounded by the measures which had been resorted to. They promptly informed the justice of this fact, and stated that the only question that could arise out of that evidence was whether the accused persons should be kept in the employ of the Government.

After much effort the case was investigated by the military authorities and through Gen. Mansfield the Justice was informed that they knew of no cause for the detention of any of the accused in custody; and directed him to act entirely under the directions of the House Committee. This committee, indignant at the bare imputation that they had caused the false arrest, promptly refused to give any directions in the case; but just as promptly informed the Justice that they had never for a moment conceived the idea that there was the slightest ground for arrest, or for any proceeding beyond a fair and impartial investigation as to whether the accused should be retained in the employ of the Government. Finding that Mr. Miller had been arrested, and was detained by a purely “false imprisonment,” he was, after something more than a day’s incarceration, released from the prison.

Thus has a man, who, by a life of undeviating integrity, of unostentatious modesty, and of sincere piety, richly earned for himself a character as spotless as the falling snow, been subjected to a cruel and inhuman persecution—to a degrading and humiliating indignity, that has brought sorrow and distress upon a heart stricken family, purely through an insatiate greediness for employment which the Government has found so faithfully attended in his hands.
As to the allegations made by means of this cowardly skulking behind the necessary secrets of the committee room, Mr. Miller defies his pursuers. He dares them to meet him in an investigation, where they will have to confront him. He denies them in the aggregate, and in detail. They have not the weak foundation of any hasty or incautious expressions, which even their wicked and greedy imaginations could torture into the slightest assemblance of what they have alleged.

Permit me to add, in conclusion, that this is written by one who has left the luxuries of home, to take the hazards of the war for the maintenance of the Federal Government, and whose loyalty has for its foundation a hearty, undeviating, and I may say, industrious support of the Republican organization from the hour of its birth—and an enthusiastic support of its policy for a period extending many years anterior. I.M.T.

Hopes of His Recovery

Mr. J.C. Miller, of the Daily Critic, who fell from a window of his residence yesterday, as stated in The Star, is not fatally injured, his many friends will be glad to hear. His injuries consist of a fractured thigh, a dislocated shoulder, cut head and badly bruised body and some internal injuries. There are now good grounds for the belief that he will recover, and to this end it is desired that he shall be kept in quietude and that his sympathizing friends will refrain from calling for the present.

Death of Mr. Miller

Mr. J.C. Miller, one of the proprietors and business manager of the Daily Critic, died at his residence on 10th street this afternoon at 2:40. The immediate cause of death was pneumonia, produced by the injuries received in the side by his fall from a third-story window last week. Mr. Miller commanded the respect of all who came in contact with him. He was a most excellent business man, and a true friend. His death will be regretted by the entire community.

The Death of Mr. J.C. Miller

The sad announcement of the death of Mr. J.C. Miller was made in yesterday's Star. He was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in Lancaster in 1832; he was thus in his 48th year. He has since early life been actively in business, and has been distinguished by energy and industry. He was quick and nervy, pleasant and with a keen sense of the humorous. His father was much the same kind of man, as Pennsylvanians, those who knew him in the early railroad wars, recollect. Mr. J.C. Miller came to Washington at the invitation of John W. Forney in 1861 to assume the business management of the Daily Chronicle. He has often told the writer about his experiences. No books were kept when he took charge and no accounts of receipts made. He went to work and brought everything into accord with his accurate ideas of business. He used to stay at the office until after the paper was printed and then throw himself on a pile of paper and snatch a few hours sleep. He maintained management of the Daily Chronicle until 1868, when he started the Critic. He was in every way a sterling man and was always disposed to do acts of kindness and charity. His widow, a most estimable lady, was Miss Catherine Durham, of Baltimore. He also leaves a beautiful daughter about eight years old.

The employees of the Critic held a meeting this morning to take action in reference to the death of Mr. Miller. Mr. E.T. Peters, the editor of the paper, presided, and Mr. W.A. West was the secretary. Mr. A.J. Clarke offered a series of resolutions of condolence with the family, which were adopted, as also resolutions that they will attend the funeral in a body. The funeral will take place at two o'clock p.m. tomorrow and the interment will be made at the Congressional cemetery.
The Evening Star, September 1, 1880
The Late J.C. Miller

Yesterday afternoon a meeting of members of the local press was held in the editorial rooms of the Republican to take action regarding the death of Mr. J.C. Miller, of the Daily Critic. Representatives of all the city papers were present, as follows:--H.H. de Witt, Post; Chas. T. Murray, Sunday Republic; Otto Reinecke, Washington Journal; John B. McCarthy, Sunday Gazette; J.H. Doyle, Sunday Herald; A.M. Clapp, H.P. Godwin and W.S. Larner, National Republican; C.S. Noyes, James Croggon and Fletcher Hodges, of the Star; E.T. Peters ad A.J. Clarke, Critic. The meeting was organized with Mr. A.M. Clapp in the chair and Mr. C.S. Noyes secretary.

On motion of Mr. McCarthy a committee was appointed on resolutions, and Messrs. McCarthy, Hodges and Peters were appointed. The reported the following:

We desire to place on records as a mark of our appreciation of the worth of Jacob Carpenter Miller the following: That he was known to us as an energetic journalist and business man--prompt, just and liberal in his dealings; a citizen whose efforts were directed to advancing the general interest of the community; a friend whose friendship was no idle sentiment; a husband whose true worth none but the afflicted wife can ever know, and a kind father, whose example is worthy of emulation. In fact, from our long association with him we have no hesitation in saying that he was a man in every sense of the world. The loss to his family, to his associates and to the community is irreparable, and none will miss him more than the many who have unknown to the world been aided by him. As the last mark of respect for our friend we will attend his funeral in a body.

Appropriate remarks were made by Messrs. Clapp, McCarthy, Noyes, Peters, Chief Brooks, of the secret service, and Cohen, who all testified to the worth of Mr. Miller in the warmest terms, and the report was adopted. Messrs. A.M. Clapp, of the Republican, and C.S. Noyes, of the Star, were selected to represent the newspaper fraternity as pall-bearers. The resolutions were ordered to be engrossed for transmittal to Mrs. Miller.

The funeral took place at 2 o'clock this afternoon from the late residence of Mr. Miller, No. 919 G street, and it was attended by many of the friends of deceased, including representatives of the press and numerous business houses, and the employees of the Critic. The religious services were conducted by Rev. Dr. A.W. Pitzer, of the Central Presbyterian church, who paid a feeling tribute to the memory of the deceased. The pall-bearers were Messrs. A.M. Clapp, of the Republican; C.S. Noyes, of the Star; A.L. Hazelton, Louis Barr, Henry Franc, G.F. Timms, L. Lansburg and E.G. Davis. The remains, in full dress suit, were encaiced in a handsome walnut casket, covered with black cloth and silk velvet, with massive silver bar handles and plate on the breast, inscribed: "J. Carpenter Miller: Died August 30, 1880: Aged 48 years." The floral decorations were most beautiful and tasteful, and quite enveloped casket. During the morning large numbers of the friends called to view the corpse, there being at the residence a continual stream of visitors going and coming, and in the number were many of the younger members of the community, who, as newsboys, had been brought in contact with the deceased. At the conclusion of the services at the house the corpse was borne to the hearse, and followed by a long line of carriages containing relatives, friends and acquaintances, it was taken to Congressional Cemetery, where the interment was made under the supervision of Mr. W.R. Spear.

The funeral of John Miller, prominent in local business affairs for years, who died at Atlantic City yesterday afternoon, will be held Monday at 2 o’clock. The details for the services have not been completed. The remains have been brought to Washington, where the obsequies will be held.

Mr. Miller went to Atlantic City two weeks ago to recuperate from an attack of internal and muscular trouble, from which he had suffered at various times for several years. Instead of improving, his condition became worse.

His daughter, Mrs. B. Wilson Brocket of Cleveland, and his son, William C. Miller, a student at Yale University, joined the other members of the family at the seacoast resort. Mrs. Miller and one son and daughter went to Atlantic City with Mr. Miller.

John Miller was born in England 58 years ago, but came to Washington at the age of 23 years. At the time of his death he was one of the prominent business men of the city.

He turned his attention to the manufacture of brick soon after coming here and gained much experience from manufacturers of this vicinity. Several years ago he became president of the Washington Brick and Terra Cotta Company.

He was a member of several fraternal bodies, among them Masonic orders of the Scottish Rite and the Mystic Shrine. During the last campaign he took much interest in the work of the democratic party in this city.

The members of his family who survive him are his wife, his sister, Mrs. A.M.P. Maschmeyer, his daughters, Agnes Miller, Sarah Miller and his sons, Henry Miller, William C. Miller and Allison Miller.

Miss M.D. Miller Dies
Funeral Services to be Held Tomorrow at Sacred Heart Church
Miss Margaret D. Miller, aged 83 years, died at her home, 1652 Newton street, yesterday. Death was ascribed to complications resulting from an injury sustained when she fell in the hallway of her home several months ago.

Miss Miller is survived by two sisters, Miss Elizabeth Miller and Miss Georgia Miller, with whom she resided.

Funeral services will be conducted in Sacred Heart Catholic Church tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, following brief services at the residence. Interment will be private, in Congressional Cemetery.

Miller, Margaret Dove: A descendant of the early settlers of this country, and for many years a resident of Washington, died of pneumonia at her residence, 331 Sixth street southeast, Sunday. Funeral services were conducted at the residence yesterday. Interment was in Congressional Cemetery. Miss Miller was about 80 years old.

She was the daughter of the late Dr. Aaron Miller for many years a prominent physician of this city, and who was active in charity work here following the Civil War. Miss Miller's mother was the late Mrs. Julia Woodward Miller, a great-granddaughter of Lady Ann Perrott, who ran away from England with Benjamin King to Gretna Green and married, later coming to this country. Miss Miller was the granddaughter of Maj. Amon Woodward, who fought with the American Army in the War of 1812, and was awarded a tract of land by the Government for his services.

Miss Miller was born in this city, but moved with her parents to Danville, Va., at the outbreak of the Civil War, where Dr. Miller was in charge of the Confederate hospital. They moved back to Washington, however, just after the war.

She is survived by a sister, Miss Mary B. Miller, who nursed the Confederate wounded at Danville.

Miller, Maria: In this city, at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning, of a pulmonary consumption, after a protracted illness of eleven months, Mrs. Maria Miller, consort of Maj. Samuel Miller, and daughter of Henry Bedinger, Esq. of Berkley county, Virginia. Sensible of her approaching dissolution, she was prepared to obey the mandate of the Most High with that meek submission and Christian-like fortitude which characterize those who seek the rewards of a virtuous and well spent life, in "another and a better world." The friends and acquaintances of the family are respectfully invited to attend her funeral tomorrow, (Tuesday) at one o'clock, without a more particular invitation.

This little flower plucked in the bud from among the thorns of this life, has been transplanted in the Garden of Paradise, there to bloom into greater beauty and to pour out the fragrance of its infant heart at the feet of its Maker--He who bids us not to refuse their coming unto Him, "for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." The sorrow which fills the parents heart at their loss should be assuaged by the knowledge that their little one, full now of the wisdom of Heaven, will be, for them, a never-tiring advocate before the Eternal throne. The Evening Star, October 2, 1912
Rev. Dr. N.H. Miller, Union Veteran, Dead
Clerk of Presbyterian Synod and G.A.R. Official, Victim of Paralysis
Rev. Dr. N.H. Miller, stated clerk of the Presbyterian Synod of Baltimore, which is made up of the Presbyteries of Washington, New Castle, Del., and Baltimore, died at his home at McLean, Va., near Falls Church, at 10 o’clock this morning. His death was due to a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered Sunday evening about 8 o’clock.

Dr. Miller, in addition to his duties as synod clerk, was connected with a bureau of the War Department. He had never given up ministerial duty, occupying a pulpit near his home each Sunday morning. During the afternoon Sunday he complained of slight illness, and later he suffered the paralytic stroke.

Was an Officer in G.A.R.
Dr. Miller was junior vice commander of the G.A.R., Department of the Potomac.
No arrangements have been made for the funeral, but Adjt. Gen. O.H. Oldroyd of the department said today that the Grand Army would participate, and that the burial may be in Arlington, if Dr. Miller's family acquiesces. Rev. T.E. Davis, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, and stated clerk of the Presbytery of Washington, went to the Miller home this afternoon, and on his arrival, it is expected, arrangements for the funeral services will be completed.

Dr. Miller always took a deep interest in the work of the G.A.R., as he did in his church affiliations. For a time before becoming junior vice commander of the Department of the Potomac he served as department chaplain of the organization.

Planned Memorial Day Program

He was for several years in charge of the Decoration day exercises held annually in Congressional Cemetery under the auspices of the Grand Army. His choice of orator for the occasion in that cemetery last May was former Representative Harvey S. Irwin of Louisville, who in preceding years had made addresses at Stone River and other historic battlefields of the civil war. At the close of the exercises Dr. Miller was widely congratulated on the program he had supervised.

<td>Departed this life suddenly, in this City, about 8 o'clock in the evening of the 26th instant, Major Thomas Miller, aged 70 years; a native of the town of Port Royal, in the State of Virginia, and long one of the most enterprising, highly respected, and valuable residents of that town. Major Miller became a resident of this City about 12 years since, and has, during the greater part of that time acted as a Clerk in the Navy Department. The writer of this hasty notice has known the deceased intimately, more than half a century, and is warranted in saying, that no individual ever did possess, in a higher degree than he did, all those moral and social qualities, which constitute and characterize the good man and good citizen. He has left a beloved wife, a large family of children and grand-children, and an extensive circle of devoted friends, to lament the loss of this important link in the chain of their affections and long established friendship. The Evening Star, August 1, 1864
Sad Accident
On Saturday evening, while a party of little girls were playing on the pavement in front of the shoe store of Mr. John Mills, on Pennsylvania avenue, east of 3d street, a box, in which were encased the shutters of the store window, fell upon little Ella Mills, a child of 12 years, and daughter of Mr. John Mills, and caused a compound fracture of the skull; the box striking upon the right side of the head. A number of physicians were speedily called in, and did all in their power to relieve the miseries of the little sufferer. Dr. N.S. Lincoln was called upon, and performed a surgical operation, taking out a large portion of the skull. Dr. L. pronounced it one of the most serious fractures he had ever seen, yet strange to say, the sufferer, although so young, has fully retained her senses, and recognizes all the members of her family. She is convinced that she must die, and, with an affectionate regard for those she leaves behind, has divided all her trinkets, toys and playthings as remembrances, among her family and friends. She has borne her sufferings with a fortitude that would do much credit to an older person. The family is plunged in the most poignant grief, and it is to be hoped that the physicians; among whom, in addition to Dr. Lincoln, are Dr.s Riley, Dove, Young, and Todd, will be able yet to save the life of the sufferer.

The Evening Star, June 2, 1854

The Late Funeral at the Navy Yard

On Sunday last, at the funeral of Mr. Lewis Meinzeshammer, a late Sergeant of the Marines, and member of Union Lodge of Odd Fellows, a scene was enacted not at all creditable to the person causing it who went much out of his way, and far overstepped the bounds of modesty to interfere with his neighbors.

The funeral procession started from the Barracks in the received order –i.e. the Marines first, the Odd fellows next, after whom came the body, following which were the mourners, etc. The procession had proceeded some ways on the road to the grave yard, when an order was given to put the Odd Fellows behind the hearse, as mourners. As the order came from the commandant of the U.S.M.C., and was expected to be complied with by the funeral escort, the Odd Fellows broke from the line and returned to their lodge room. A committee of three were appointed to wait on General Henderson, and seek an explanation of this strange and unprecedented proceeding.

The General stated that the deceased was a soldier, and as such he claimed him, and claimed the right to bury him with the honors of war, and the right to command; and if his rights in that respect were interfered with, he should give an order that his men should not join the beneficial societies, or be refused a military funeral.

Now, I contend, the deceased was not a soldier to be claimed by a Brigadier General by Brevet, or any one else, even a Lieutenant of Marines acting Aid-de-Camp. Death gave him a discharge, and then his remains belonged to his family and his friends. They wished the Order to bury him, nor would they have felt any chagrin had the Marines not escorted the remains to the grave.

From the earliest recollections of our oldest citizens, funeral processions have always been formed as this was on Sunday, and all was right. The Grand Lodge of the United States says the Order shall precede the body to the grave, and throughout the world this is the first time the rule has ever been set, or attempted to be set aside. The last funeral of this kind was, I think, that of the late Captain Dove, at which the procession was formed by the Marines, and four different associations preceded the body, and no one was sufficiently wise to find the matter wrong, because they know it was right. I think General Henderson made here a great error, one which he would never have made, had he been left of himself; but he was drawn into it by the officiousness of his Aid, whose sin in this respect has passed from him to his father. The greatest wrong committed was by the Order in leaving the line, thus indirectly admitting the right of General Henderson to interfere in the arrangements.

The National Intelligencer, June 29, 1832
It gives us pain to have to announce the decease of another member of Congress, the Hon. George E. Mitchell, one of the representatives from Maryland, who died yesterday. He has been for more than a year past laboring under disease, has been able to attend his public duties only occasionally since he arrived here in December last, and has not been expected, we believe, by his friends, to outlive the session. From some friend of his we expect some notice of the character and services of the deceased. He was a distinguished officer of the army during the last war, and universally esteemed and respected by all who knew him, for the several years that he was subsequently in public life.

The National Intelligencer, June 30, 1832
In The House of Representatives
After the journal of the previous day's proceedings we read --
Mr. Howard, of Maryland, rose and thus addressed the House:
Mr. Speaker: It has devolved upon me to communicate to the House, the decease of George E. Mitchell, one of the Representatives of the State of Maryland. The infirm state of health in which he had been for a long time past, must have been apparent to every one, until at length, the struggles between a naturally robust constitution, and an inveterate disease, are over, have terminated in his decease, and he now sleeps with his fathers. It is but a short time, since, we were called on to pay the last melancholy tribute of respect, and to follow to the tomb the remains of one of our body, who was suddenly cut off in the meridian of his usefulness, and now, we find our ranks again broken. These events force one reflection of my mind, which I crave leave to express. Whilst in the performance of our duties, we are prescribing laws for others, we find ourselves the subjects of a system of other laws, which we had no share in enacting. Sire, there is no Republic in the government of the Universe; and yet how absolute is the necessity, how absolute the obligation, of obedience to the Deity, who, in his wisdom, has framed that code. I will not attempt now or here, to portray the life or character of the deceased. The spontaneous offer, on the part of the military authorities of the city, to join in such testimonial of respect as the House may order sufficiently demonstrates that the name of Mitchell is inscribed on the rolls of Fame. Whilst in the service of his country, during the recent war, his brilliant defense of the Fort of Oswego, with which he was entrusted, won the applause due to successful valor: returning from his military career, and embarking in all the turmoils of political life, he brought into this House a frankness of deportment, unobtrusive efficiency, and such steady judgment, that I may with perfect safety assert that he won the friendship of those who knew him well, and obtained respect from all. Let us withdraw awhile from the cares which surround us here, and unite in paying the last tribute of respect to his memory. In order that we may do so, I submit to you the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Members of this House will attend the funeral of the late Geo. E. Mitchell, at 5 o'clock, p.m.

That a Committee be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of George E. Mitchell, deceased, late a member of this House, from the State of Maryland.

That the members of this House will testify their respect for his memory by wearing crape, etc.

It was then ordered that a Message be sent to the Senate to notify to them the death of Mr. M., and the hour that his funeral would take place.

Mr. Howard, Mr. Thompson, of Georgia, Mr. Blair, of S.C., Mr. Alexander, Mr. Carson, Mr. Dearborn, and Mr. Ward, were named as the Committee.

After which, the House adjourned.

A Fireman Drowned

About 11 o'clock today, the body of an unknown white man was found floating in the James creek canal, at G street south, and it was removed to the first precinct station house. The coroner directed the removal of the body to Buckley's undertaking establishment. The body was dressed in a black frock coat, cloth vest and pants, kip boots, and appeared to be that of a man 35 or 40 years of age, five feet eight inches in height, medium build, light hair and heavy mustache, and the figure "5" 2as tattooed on his left forearm. It is supposed that it is the body of Levi Molling, of No. 6 engine company, residing at 491 G street southwest.

In this city, on Thursday, July 12th, 1821, Benjamin Moore, Esq. in his 63d year. Mr. Moore was a native of Massachusetts, whence he moved to this city soon after its foundation. He was long a magistrate for the county of Washington, the duties of which office he discharged with ability. In the early part of his life he took a part in the revolutionary war; and was always a devoted admirer of the principles that animated America at that period. He is one of the few men who has passed from life to eternity without reproach. His principles were liberal, but somewhat eccentric, and especially those of religion and morality. He had contemplated the virtues of the ancient Stoici with intense pleasure, and perhaps yielded too much to their philosophy for the notions of the present time. Like that sect, he thought that the doctrine of future rewards and punishments was unnecessary to excite or intimidate in regard to the concerns of another life. The different systems of theology, he considered to be too heterogeneal and perplexed for any settled and determinate faith. Incredulous of what appeared to be embarrassed, he rejected nothing that was made evident to his understanding, and practiced what he believed. He revered one God, through universal nature, up to the seat of his omnipotence, and was patient under the dispensations of his Providence. Between man and man his actions were honest, and his words were truth. His obsequies were performed by his Masonic brethren, and attended by nearly the whole population of the neighborhood, an evidence of the high respect with which he was regarded. Whilst living his maxim was good will to all mankind. Peace be to him in the grave!

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Obituary

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery
Last Updated: 02/12/15
Mr. Weller, of Ohio, rose and addressed the House as follows:

Mr. Speaker: Death has again been amongst us. Another of our associates has been taken from this Hall, and transferred to another, and I trust a better world—to a house not "made with hands, eternal in the heavens." My colleague, Heman Allen Moore, who but a few days since stood upon this floor as one of the proud Representatives of a great and powerful State, now sleeps in the silent tomb; his spirit rests in the hands of the Creator. He died at his residence, (Columbus, Ohio) on Wednesday morning, the 3d instant.

Gen. Moore came here at the commencement of the present session apparently in good health, but, after a few weeks' labor in this Hall, was stricken by a disease which, although sometimes slow in its progress, never fails in the end to baffle the skill of the most successful physician. Consumption had fastened its fangs upon his vitals, and after a few months of suffering, closed his career. He left this city on ___ for his family, with foreboding that his days were few and numbered, and that he would not live to return to his post. Notwithstanding his debility, it will be remembered that, on the day preceding his departure, he was upon this floor, warmly and zealously advocating and carrying through a bill in which a portion of his immediate constituents felt a deep solicitude. It was the last act of his political life.

The deceased was a native of Vermont, where he received a liberal education. He studied law in Rochester, New York, and, after completing his professional studies and forming a matrimonial alliance, removed to Columbus, Ohio, where he maintained a respectable standing at the bar. At the time of his decease he was about thirty-four years of age. After a residence of only six or seven years in Ohio he was appointed Adjutant General, and soon after, at the last Congressional election, selected as the Representative upon this floor of one of the largest and most respectable districts. Notwithstanding he was a young man, comparatively a stranger, and with no experience whatever in legislation, his stern integrity, strict morality, useful talents, and unflagging perseverance, gave undoubted assurance that in his hands the interests of the people would never be compromised. I need scarcely say to those who witnessed his brief career as a Representative that this confidence was not misplaced.

It is perhaps difficult to engage actively for any length of time in the exciting scenes of party strife without incurring the enmity of those whose interests, opinions, or feelings may be counter to ours. Political differences too often affect our private relations, and convert into enemies those who, under other circumstances, would have been bound together by the strongest ties of friendship. General Moore, however, had no enemies in this hall. Open, frank, and independent in the maintenance of those principles which he conscientiously believed were inseparably connected with the prosperity of the country, yet kind, courteous, and conciliating towards those who differed with him, he gave offense to none. Whilst he enjoyed the unlimited confidence of his political friends, he always retained the respect and esteem of his opponents.

It is some consolation to his friends here to know that he reached home in time to receive the kindness and attention of his family “in the hour and article of death.” He died not amongst strangers and in a strange land, far from his home and kindred, but in the bosom of his family, and surrounded by a generous constituency, who had honored him with their confidence, and whose regard he so richly merited. An amiable and devoted wife hung over his bed of suffering and smoothed the pillow of death. No condolence of ours, however sincerely offered—no tears of sympathy, be they ever so profusely shed, can heal the agonized heart of the bereaved widow. To her the loss is irreparable. He upon whom she had placed her hopes of happiness in domestic life, he around whom all the warm affections of her heart had been gathered, and whom she loved with all the enthusiasm and devotion of her sex, the father and protector of her three helpless children, has been torn from her bosom forever. The heart that once beat in unison with hers has ceased to pulsate forever. The eye of affection, which once carried joy and gladness to her soul, has been closed by the cold hand of death. The partner of her pleasures and pains, the idol of her heart, has gone to that land where “sin and sorrow are known no more,” “where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.” That God “who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb” can alone console and sustain her under this afflicting dispensation. May we not also hope that He who has promised to be a “father to the fatherless” will watch over and protect the helpless orphans left to mourn the loss of an earthly parent.

Day after day we are admonished of the certainty of death and the uncertainty of the time thereof. How often has the truth been forced upon our minds by impressive lessons that “in the midst of life we are in death.” Today the politician stands in this hall, the proud representative of a free people, commanding by his genius our respect and engaging our attention; tomorrow comes a withering frost, and those lips of eloquence, which could once arouse the soul to all the sublime feelings of patriotism and valor, become motionless and silent, to be heard no more. “The grass withereth and the flower fadeth.” But a few days since my deceased friend and colleague sat by my side watching over the interests of his constituents with a zeal that never tired, a vigilance that never flagged; today he sleeps in the silent grave, his voice has been hushed and will no more be heard in this hall. This seat which once knew him will know him no more forever.
He had but just commenced his career on the busy theatre of life. Honored with a seat in the national councils, happy in his domestic relations, surrounded by kind and devoted friends, looking forward with high hopes of future honor and usefulness, he has been cut down in the morning of life by the unsparing hand of death. “Life’s fitful fever is over,” and no man shall see him more. Oh!

“What shadows we are, what shadows we pursue.”

Should not the number of our associates who have been stricken down from our side within the last few months admonish us of the littleness of our controversies here, the uncertainty of our sojourn on earth, and the necessity for being prepared to take our departure to that “bourne whence no traveler returns?” Let us be ready, “for no one knoweth the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh.”

As a tribute of respect to the memory of our deceased friend and late associate, I offer the following resolutions and ask their adoption:

Resolved, That this House has heard with the liveliest sensibility the annunciation of the death of the Hon. Herman Allen Moore, late a member from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That this House tenders to the family and relatives of the deceased the expression of its sympathy on this afflicting event, and as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members and officers will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That, as a further testimony of respect, this House will now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted. Whereupon the House adjourned.

Moore, James
The Evening Star, September 27, 1853

On last Sabbath morning, Mr. James Moore, one of our oldest and most worthy citizens. Mr. Moore was of the number of those, now reduced to a very few, who saw our city in its infancy, having come to reside among us more than half a century ago. Being a printer by profession, he was employed in days long gone by in the office of the National Intelligencer, even before this ancient journal came into the hands of its present venerable and respected editors. For many years past he discharged with scrupulous fidelity the duties of a place of trust in the office of the Treasurer of the United States. For a period of about thirty years he was a ruling elder in the First Presbyterian Church of this city, and at the time of his death was the oldest elder in the church. How conscientiously he performed the duties of that sacred office is well known to his brethren in the eldership and members of the church. His bereaved widow and children have by this dispensation been deprived of an affectionate husband and father. He has descended to the grave full of years, and having long lived the "life of the righteous, so his last end was like his." The news of his death fell sadly on many hearts; and numerous friends and the church he served, and with whom he so long worshipped, will cherish the memory of their departed Elder Moore.

The funeral will take place from the First Presbyterian Church, on 4 1/2 street, this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Ex-Bank Official Dies at Home Here

Joseph Gales Moore, 83, Was Former National Metropolitan Cashier

Joseph Gales Moore, 83, former cashier of the National Metropolitan Bank and actively connected with that institution for 61 years, died today at his home, 2940 Upton street. He had been in poor health for some time, but had been seriously ill only about a month.

Mr. Moore retired about five years ago from active connection with the bank. He started his work in finance as a messenger boy back in the days before the organization of the Washington Clearing House Association, where runners had to go from one bank to another, making check collections. During his 61 years in banking he witnessed many changes in banking methods. During the last years of his career he served the Metropolitan as auditor.

Began Work in 1867

Mr. Moore began his work with the Metropolitan on July 22, 1867, shortly after his graduation from Rittenhouse Academy. When not doing messenger work he was asked to give assistance to the paying teller, and this gave him his real start. The young messenger showed such ability and interest in his work that he was soon made an assistant bookkeeper. For 20 years he worked in all departments of the bank and became an expert in every phase of banking.

In May 1895 he was appointed assistant cashier and became cashier in December, 1900, succeeding George W. White, now president of the bank. He was made auditor in 1909, and, although not a director, he had the distinction of serving the board as secretary for 18 years.

Native of the District

A native of Washington, Mr. Moore was born here on July 29, 1850. His active banking career came to an end August 1, 1928. During part of the time that he was connected with the Metropolitan, he also was manager of the Washington Clearing House Association.

Before he reached such an advanced age, M. Moore was active in the Presbyterian Church. He was a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants.

He is survived by one son, Gales P. Moore of Bristol, Conn., and three daughters, Miss Anne B. Moore of Washington, Mrs. Lathrop E. Baldwin, South Orange, N.J. and Miss Kate C. Moore of Washington. His wife, Kate Carroll (Pritchard) Moore, died several months ago.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Death of Col. Moore -- Superintendent of Police Passed Away This Morning
His Long and Useful Life -- Prominent in the History of City and Country
Funeral Arrangements
Colonel William G. Moore, major, and superintendent of the police department of the District, died this morning at his home, 1710 L street northwest. Surrounded by his immediate family, but unable to recognize any one of the faithful and loving watchers, the gallant soldier and capable executive officer, who for years has devoted all his life's efforts in providing for the safety of the people now mourning his loss, gradually sank, until at 6:25 o'clock he breathed his last. The end was not unexpected, but the grief was none the less keenly felt.

Major Moore had been unconscious for some time prior to his death. It was known as early as Saturday night last that the case was one that passed beyond all human aid. The family and many friends who anxiously inquired for some reassuring news as to the condition of the ill chief were prepared for the worst. Yesterday morning it was not thought Major Moore would survive the day. As evening approached, however, he seemed to breathe more easily than for many hours past, and a slight flicker of hope was ignited in the breasts of the loving relatives at his bedside. After nightfall the major gradually grew worse. Everything that love could suggest was done to relieve his last hours.

Weary from their constant vigil, some of the family had fallen asleep early in the evening, but there were at the dying man's bedside to the last his devoted wife, his daughter, Mrs. Mary J. Smoot, and Detective Rhodes, who had served with the chief for many years, and who had been Major Moore's aid practically throughout the latter years of his term as head of the police department.
With the first faint streaks of a cloudy and dismal dawn this little group, which had steadfastly watched his every movement, saw that the end was indeed near. Although unconscious, it could be seen that a great struggle between life and death was waging in the old warrior's breast. His iron constitution yielded most reluctantly to the ravages of dread disease, fighting every advance made upon the vitality that was fast failing. It was with the utmost effort that Major Moore at last caught his breath. Just before the icy hand of the grim destroyer finally descended, however, to claim the loving husband and devoted father, he seemed to be easier, and expired at last with no sign of pain. Jovial and cheery in life, Major Moore's countenance in death was one of repose and divine contentment.

The Funeral
Complete arrangements for the funeral have not been concluded. The services will take place from the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church on Thursday afternoon at 2 or 3 o'clock, and the internment will be at Congressional cemetery. Rev. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe will officiate both at the church and at the necropolis. The funeral procession promises to be one of the most notable ever seen in the capital city. There will be a military escort, consisting of the entire strength of the Washington Light Infantry Corps, of which Col. Moore was president. The police department will march with their beloved chief to his last resting place, and it is expected that the Knights Templar will also turn out in full force. The deceased was a Mason of high degree, and a large representation from the various lodges and commanderies will be present at the obsequies. Before he became unconscious, but realizing that the end was near, Major Moore, in his last request, expressed the wish that the Washington Light Infantry should be his special funeral escort.

Col. Moore married Miss Mary G. Rose, daughter of Dr. Benjamin Rose of Virginia. The widow and a son, Jacob G. Moore of the War Department, and a daughter, Mrs. Smoot, survive him. His two brothers, Gales Moore and Alexander Moore, were at the home this morning and will assist in arranging for the funeral.

Fight for Life
Major Moore's condition had been considered serious for a week past. His absence from duty was at first caused by an attack of malaria and stomach trouble, and it was not thought any serious illness would result. The major had been continuously at work for several years, however, and the first symptoms of disease were quickly followed by a general break-down in his health. The complication became worse when it was discovered last Saturday that an abscess of the liver had formed.

Dr. Percy Hickling, Major Moore's family physician, then determined to call in Dr. W.W. Johnston. This was done and after a consultation it was decided that the only possible chance of saving the patient's life was to perform an operation, in the hope of locating and removing the abscess. Accordingly Saturday evening the operation was performed. There were no beneficial results, and the gallant soldier and police chief gradually grew worse.

Throughout Sunday he continued in a semi-comatose condition, those present at his bedside noticing a gradual weakening and loss of vitality. Sunday night and throughout yesterday Major Moore continued to grow worse and worse. His mind gradually became a blank; and by yesterday noon he could not recognize a member of his family. Dr. Hickling was at the house twice yesterday, but frankly said that the sick man had passed beyond all earthly assistance and that his death was a matter of but a very few hours. All that could be done was to make the last lingering hours as comfortable as possible. The delightful, cool weather, the many facilities at command and the anxious, willing and tender hands ready to administer to his every want made this an easy matter.

Long and Busy Life
The announcement of the serious illness of Colonel William G. Moore was received with sincere regret by the general public and his death is mourned by all classes. No man identified with the interests of the national capital was more widely or prominently known. Born in this city in the year 1829, like his father before him, he has been identified with its social and business affairs since boyhood. In early life he was a companion to be sought after and a leader among his associates, among whom were Arthur P. Gorman, Samuel E. Wheatley, William B. Webb, Charles C. Duncanson and others who are now prominent in political and business circles. He was his mother's boy, fond of his home and laudable pastimes. His early education was acquired at the Rittenhouse Academy, he subsequently engaging in newspaper work, where he won considerable reputation as a reporter of congressional debates. In this line he was known for his accuracy, rapidity and style.

In the year 1857, at the instance of General Montgomery C. Meigs, young Moore accepted a position on the public works, where his talents and ability were readily appreciated.

In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the old National Rifles, which went into camp some miles out from Washington, where he received orders to report to the Secretary of War, the late Simon Cameron, to act in the capacity of his private secretary. The order making the detail read:

<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Birth/Death</th>
<th>Age</th>
<th>Range/Site</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
"Colonel Stone will direct Mr. William G. Moore of Captain Smead's company of District volunteers to report in person to the Secretary of War without delay.
(Signed) Simon Cameron. June 1, 1861"

With that military incentive which was hereditary, Colonel Moore soon became anxious to return to his command, but the Secretary found his services too valuable to be dispensed with, and the young officer was required to remain and attend to his correspondence.

In the course of events young Moore was appointed adjutant general of volunteers, holding the rank of major with brevet rank of colonel. So diligent was he in disposing of the many important duties with which he was charged in those stirring times that he was kept continually prominent before the great men of the day.

In 1865 Colonel Moore for a brief time acted as secretary to President Lincoln and later on became private secretary to President Johnson, and the attachment which grew up between the two was like that of father and son. The President relied upon his suggestions, and he was intimate with the household at the White House.

Before leaving the Executive Mansion, President Johnson, commissioned Colonel Moore a paymaster in the army, and his assignments carried him through Kansas and the Indian territory, where he became an interesting and popular official with the rank and file of the army. Nothing afforded him more pleasure in his later years than to refer to his experiences while serving in this capacity, where he was compelled to travel by muleback and often swim flooded streams in order to reach the rendezvous.

In 1870 he became a business partner with ex-Governor Alexander R. Shepherd, and although the partnership was afterward dissolved, they remained up to the time of his death, close and intimate friends.

After going out of business Colonel Moore accepted a position in the National Metropolitan Bank, where he remained until he was appointed superintendent of the District police in 1886. During all this period he was a conspicuous officer and an acknowledged authority in military matters, being made commander of the Washington Light Infantry Corps in 1871 and colonel of the 1st Regiment of District Militia at the time of its organization a few years ago.

Superintendent of Police

In accepting the office of superintendent of police Colonel Moore took the step reluctantly. It was a case where the office sought the man, his earlier training particularly fitting him to deal with the many questions requiring extreme delicacy and diplomacy.

Upon assuming the office of superintendent of police he at once proceeded to bring about a thorough organization of the force. His military training and quick decision enabled him to master the situation and bring the force at one period to a high level. He was not only respected by all of his subordinates, but he was beloved by them, and the pleasant smile and gentle word which he had for one and all at any time will be sorely missed.

With respect to the poor and humble he was his own worst enemy, often giving from his private means on the mere representation of poverty, he fearing to injure the feelings of an applicant should he investigate the truthfulness of his statement too closely.

In the performance of duty he was fearless and courageous at all times, exhibiting a high order of judgment and discretion and an honesty of purpose in every act. Under his administration, it was his endeavor to dispose of the more unpleasant features attending the work of the police without discrimination as to creed or color, his constant idea being that business should be conducted on a high moral plane. Though not an experienced man in the detention of criminals, his selections for the work displayed marked judgment, the force under him being recognized by the various departments throughout the country as a most efficient one.

During the inaugural ceremonies he gave the entire work his personal attention, and on each occasion they were attended by thousands of participants without unpleasant incident or loss to persons and property.

Prior to the visit of Coxey's army, when all kinds of rumors were circulated as to the magnitude of the movement, Colonel Moore was the first to counsel moderation in everything. When called to the Executive Mansion, where he was consulted by the President of the United States, he gave expression to views contrary to those of others when he said, "Mr. President, I believe a course of moderation should be pursued," to which the President replied, "So do I." and the peaceful solution of the entire question at that time gave emphasis to his excellent judgment.
Colonel Moore's life was full of experiences which space will not permit to narrate at this time. He was an educated, Christian gentleman. His strong heart and iron frame were made to give way by a dread disease which could not be controlled by his physicians.

Major Moore was president and colonel of the Washington Light Infantry Corps, being one of its organizers and most enthusiastic members. The news of the financial straits in which the corps found itself when the application for receiver was recently filed caused him much worry, and if he could have willed it so he would have lived to see the famous and historic old association out of its difficulties.

The major was prominent in the military affairs of the capital before his acceptance of the superintendency of the police department. For some years after this, even, he continued active in such matters. He was a veteran of the National Rifles, and at the meetings of this old association he was the life and spirit of the occasion. A ready wit brimful of anecdotes that never failed of appreciation and possessed with a remarkable memory, he could recite incidents long since forgotten by his colleagues, but all the more enjoyably brought to mind from the fluent tongue of Major Moore.

As a member of the Masonic fraternity he was elevated to all the principal honors, being twice commander of Washington Commandery, No. 1.

When a youth, he was a recognized athlete, an experienced swimmer and acknowledged ball player and perfectly at home in a boat upon the river. As private secretary to President Johnson he accompanied that gentleman on his famous tour, which has gone down in history as "The swing around the circle," and his wonderful memory enabled him to disclose in later years memorable events and incidents which occurred in those times, and much of the history which has been contributed to the public concerning the late President Johnson and the events immediately following the war was from his wonderful store of knowledge upon the subject.

Lost a Friend.
The men in the ranks of the police department deeply appreciate the loss of Major Moore. Said a well-known private to a reporter for The Star this morning:

"All the boys realize that they have lost their best friend in the department. The major was gruff at times, but it was all over in a minute, and he was the same kind old gentleman as before. We all loved him and appreciate the many good turns he has done for us. In Major Moore we knew the kind of man we had over us and we did our best for him. Naturally the men are very anxious to learn who will be his successor. It will be many years before his memory fades from us."

The feeling is universal among the men who were thrown in contact with the major and who most willingly and heartily obeyed his every command.

To the caller at his office Major Moore always had a word of hearty greeting, and not one of his friends was allowed to depart but in a good humor at some droll story or anecdote.

Major Moore had an exciting experience at his office one day during the famous Pollard-Breckinridge case. The principals in the scandal had met at the major's, when a wordy conflict ensued and Miss Pollard drew forth a revolver and attempted to shoot the silver-tongued Kentuckian. Major Moore quickly jumped between the two irate persons and wrenched the loaded pistol from Madeline's hand, at the same time giving her a good piece of advice that she has probably not forgotten to this day.

Meeting of the Light Infantry
There will be a meeting of members, ex-members and honorary members of the Washington Light Infantry at the armory this evening to take action in regard to attending the funeral of Major Moore. Major Moore was a member of the Infantry for thirty-seven years being its commander when it was a company, a battalion and a regiment.

Words of Praise
"'Billy' Moore, as he was affectionately called by those who knew him well," said Mr. E.G. Davis, the District collector of taxes, "and I were close friends for at least forty years, I having known him ever since I came to Washington. He was a most lovable man, impulsive at times, perhaps, but never knowingly or intentionally doing anyone, no matter how humble, an injury. His was the kindest of hearts, and his death will be long and deeply mourned. As an official he was in my opinion a most valued one, and his place will be hard to fill. He was a man of real ability, of much tact, and yet most modest. As a Mason, he will be most kindly remembered, too, for he was eminent in the order, and his loss there as well as elsewhere will be a severe one."
"I cannot say too much of Major Moore," remarked Mr. Matthew Trimble, the assessor of the District, "and no one more deeply mourns him. Indeed, he was beloved by all who knew him, and his popularity was due to that lovable trait in his character which made him a friend to everyone. He made an excellent chief of police, and much of the progress of the force in recent years was due to his efforts in its behalf."

The District Commissioners directed Capt. Austin to visit the family and learn their wishes as to the funeral, but Capt. Austin stated this afternoon that, while the family had decided that the funeral shall be held at the New York Avenue Church at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, the interment to be made at the Congressional cemetery, they were undecided as to whether there shall be other than a very quiet, simple funeral, attended by no other than a detail of police officers. These matters will be decided between now and tomorrow morning. All flags on the police stations were half-masted upon Maj. Moore's death becoming known, as well as that upon the District building. Chief Parris of the fire department also ordered that flags on the houses of the fire-department be displayed at half mast.

His Successor
The Commissioners announced today that they will not consider the matter of Maj. Moore's successor until after his funeral. It is expected that there will be many applicants for the position, but the man who is most frequently mentioned in connection with the place is Mr. Richard Sylvester, the chief clerk of the police department. He is regarded as one most competent to succeed Maj. Moore, as one thoroughly familiar, because of his long connection with the District police force, with all the duties and requirements of the position, and it is believed that his selection would meet with general approval.

The Moore Obsequies -- Dead Chief of Police to Be Buried at Congressional Cemetery
Funeral Services at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church -- Military and Masonic Honors

The funeral of Colonel William G. Moore, major and superintendent of the metropolitan police, will take place tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, and the interment will be at Congressional cemetery. The dead chief will be buried with military and Masonic honors. The services at the grave will be in charge of Washington Commandery, Knights Templar, while Captain Miller's company of the Washington Light Infantry will fire a salute of three volleys at the close of the civil ceremonies.

The honorary pallbearers have been selected and will be as follows: District Commissioner John B. Wight, who is in immediate control of the police department; Mr. E.G. Davis, the District tax collector; Mr. Richard Sylvester, chief clerk of the police department; Mr. Allison Nailor and Mr. Harrison Dingman of the Washington Light Infantry, Messrs. G.H.B. White, W.P. Young and John Harrower. The active pallbearers will come from the members of the police force. The selections have not yet been made, but it is understood that the pallbearers will probably be the sergeants of the police force, one from each precinct. An escort of 128 men from the police force, in command of Captain Austin and four lieutenants, will form at Major Moore's late residence, 1710 L street northwest, marching with the body to the church, and afterward joining in the funeral procession to Congressional cemetery.

A committee of the Union Soldiers' Alliance, of which Major Moore was a member, has been especially appointed to attend the funeral, and it is expected that a large representation will be present. The committee appointed by President Harrower consists of Dr. Frank T. Howe, Judge Chas. C. Cole, Col. U.S. Worthington and Henry E. Alvord.

Services at the House
The services at the house will be very simple. Dr. Radcliffe will offer prayer and then the march to the church will be made. Here the body will be met by the entire Washington Light Infantry Corps, in uniform; the National Guard Band and a large representation from Washington and other commanderies of Knights Templar. The Templars will ride in carriages. Maj. Moore was a member of Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and a number of officers of this lodge will be present.

Dr. Radcliffe will conduct the services at the church and will probably make a short address. The Masonic ceremonies at the grave will be performed by Associate Prelate Albion Paris and Eminent Commander C.D. Caldwell, assisted by Past Eminent Commanders E.G. Davis, Harrison Dingman, D.G. Dixon, H.K. Simpson, Alex. H. Holt, G.H. Walker and T.P. Morgan. The funeral arrangements are in charge of Undertaker Joseph Gawler.

The flags on the station houses and fire engine houses, as well as on the District building and the Washington Light Infantry Armory, are still flying at half mast in respect to the memory of Maj. Moore.
A special meeting of the executive committee of the Washington Humane Society was held today to give expression to the deep sense of loss felt by the society in the death of Maj. Moore. The president, Mr. A.S. Pratt, proposed the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, setting forth: "The Washington Humane Society sincerely mourns the loss of William G. Moore, superintendent of police, one of its most valued friends, who was ever in hearty sympathy with the aim and work of the society; whose ear was ever open to the cry of distress, and his ready help extended to our officers and agents when his aid was asked to bring relief to suffering child or animal or to visit punishment upon those inflicting or responsible for such suffering.

"The society, knowing how largely it is dependent upon those who execute the law for the success of its work, realizes is great loss in the death of our honored and faithful superintendent of police."

It was ordered that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased.

In Memory of Col. Moore

Special Meeting of W.L.I. to Arrange for Funeral
A special meeting of the members of the Washington Light Infantry was held last night at the armory to take suitable action on the death of their late president, Col. William G. Moore. Major Burton R. Ross called the meeting to order, stating the sad circumstances under which the call has been made. He paid a tribute to the memory of Col. Moore, who, he said, had been prominently connected with the corps for many years, and whose last request, almost, was that he should be buried under an escort from the organization.

Lieutenant A.A. Birney was appointed chairman of a committee to draft suitable resolutions and a committee on floral tribute was also appointed. It was decided that as far as possible the corps shall march at the funeral in their white uniforms, those not being fully equipped with this style of dress to form separate companies uniformed in regular army style. The National Guard Brigade Band under the direction of Mr. Donald McLeod will march with the funeral procession. At the grave a salute of three rounds will be fired over the last resting place of the dead soldier, and taps will be sounded by the buglers.

A general invitation will be extended to all ex-members and veterans of the corps to join in this last homage to their dead leader. There will be another meeting of the corps tonight, when the resolutions to be drafted will be adopted and the final arrangements for the military escort made.

A Warning to Col. Moore
Col. Wm. G. Moore is still at the head of the police department, and this morning when a Star reporter called he was sitting at his desk transacting business as usual. He did not appear badly frightened, nor was he nervous, notwithstanding the presence of a postal card on his death, on which was sketched what was intended to represent a skull and crossbones. On the postal was written:

"Sir: If President Harrison don't move you, I will.
Yours until death,
Member of the C.P.L.

"Beware, your days are numbered." "True until death" were the words written about the skull and crossbones representation.

The postal was received Saturday afternoon, and the address on the postal was:
"Major Moore,
"Superintendent Washington Police Force
"City."

Col. Moore had nothing to say about the postal other than to ask if he looked like he was frightened.

Death of Capt. W.W. Moore,
A Sketch of His Useful and Honorable Career

Captain Moore, up to a few years ago, enjoyed remarkably good health, seldom having lost a day from business in his active and useful life. About two weeks ago he suffered an attack of paralysis, from which he was unable to rally. On Tuesday morning he became unconscious and continued so to the end.

Captain Moore was born January 28th, 1803, on the Manokin river, some twenty miles from Princess Anne, Somerset county, on the eastern shore of Maryland. His father was John B. Moore, son of Elijah Moore, who died January 29th 1791, and his mother was Sally Bowen, whose parents resided in the same county. The family moved from Somerset county to Baltimore in 1807, and the father, being a contractor and builder, did considerable work in that city. Afterwards he received the appointment of lumber inspector from the governor, and filled that position for some years. When 16 years of age the deceased was indentured to the printers' business with General Benjamin Eades, editor and proprietor of the Baltimore Republican, then published at the corner of 2d and Gay streets. General Eades shortly afterwards sold out the paper and removed his job office to the corner of Baltimore and South streets, and Mr. Moore remained with him until his majority. He displayed such aptness for the business that General Eades, before he was free, placed him in charge of the establishment and gave him a seat at the family table, removing him from that at which the other apprentices ate. Captain Moore was married in Baltimore, June 13th, 1825, to Lucinda Ann Depass, who died on the 15th of August last. February 1st, 1829, Captain Moore came to this city and took charge of the printing office of General Duff Green. He remained with him until 1834, when he resigned and opened a job printing office on Pennsylvania avenue, but in a short time gave it up, and returned to General Green, took charge of his office on Capitol Hill and wound up his business for him. Captain Moore then moved back to Baltimore with his family, and with General Green started "The Merchant," a newspaper which was not successful.

In 1838 Captain Moore returned with his family to this city and took charge of the paper department of the "National Intelligencer," then published by Gales & Seaton and remained as the managing editor until January 1st, 1865, a period of over twenty-six years. He was then offered the position of secretary and treasurer of the Metropolitan Railroad company, of this city and filled that position up to the day of his death.

Captain Moore came from a military family. His uncle, John Bowen, was a midshipman of the navy attached to Commodore Barney's flotilla in the Chesapeake Bay in the War of 1812. After the flotilla was blown up he participated in the skirmish at Bladensburg, and was one of the officers in charge of the water battery at the bombardment of Fort McHenry. After the repulse of the British, Capt. Moore was enrolled in a company of youths to prepare ammunition and to repel a second attack. When about eighteen years of age, he was appointed an ensign in Col. Eades' regiment of Maryland militia, and afterwards a captain by the governor of the state. Subsequently he commanded the Howard Volunteers of Baltimore. After he came here he was elected captain of the National Cadets, a company in existence prior to the organization of the Washington Light Infantry, commanded by Col. W.G. Moore, the eldest son of the deceased.

Always taking an interest in public affairs, Capt. Moore was induced in 1857 to run as a candidate for the board of aldermen of Washington city from the 4th ward in which he resided, and he was elected and filled the position with so much ability that he was re-elected for several subsequent terms. He also served several terms in the board of common council, a number of them as presiding officer. When, in 1871, the District government was changed he was at once elected a member of the house of delegates of the District legislature.

Capt. Moore became an Odd Fellow in September 1822, and at once took an active interest in the order. He almost from the first saw the advantage of the order having a home here and was one of the leaders in the project of purchasing a site and meeting hall. He was one of the building committee of the hall on 7th street and held the position of president of the board of trustees for several years, and was the chairman of the building committee, and as such purchased the ground and managed the property. He was elected representative to the Grand Lodge of the United States over forty years ago, and was nominated for the position of Grand Sire several times and declined. In 1830 he was elected to that position and filled it very acceptably. In 1843, as one of the members of the division of the work, he rendered valuable service and was the author of a Digest of the Laws of the Order.

Capt. Moore over forty years ago became attached to the Fourth Presbyterian church with his family and had been a communicant thereof for many years. In antebellum days, through his management of the National Intelligencer, he was brought into contact with nearly all of the leading men of the country and had the personal friendship of many of them.

He was the father of twelve children, eight of whom grew up to majority and married, and six of these survive him: Mrs. B.M. Campbell of Fauquier county Va.; Col. W.G. Moore and Mrs. Dr. D. McFarlan, of this city; Rev. Alexander D. Moore, pastor of the 1st Presbyterian church of Bethlehem, Pa.; Mrs. E.M. Nourse, whose husband recently deceased, and Mr. J. Gales Moore, of the National Metropolitan Bank.
The deceased, by his probity of character and courteous manners, won the respect and esteem of all with whom he came in contact.

It has been the custom when a past grand sire of Odd Fellows dies to summons all the principal officers of the grand lodge to arrange for the funeral. This will be done in the case of Past Grand Sire Moore.

The several branches of the Order of Odd Fellows, of which deceased was a member, will meet this evening for the purpose of making arrangements for attending the funeral.

The Funeral of Capt. W.W. Moore
The funeral of the late Capt. W.W. Moore took place at noon Saturday from his home, 600 F street northwest. Rev. Joseph T. Kelly, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church and Rev. John MacLane conducted the services. Mr. Kelly made an address. The honorary pall bearers were John W. Thompson, George W. Pearson, Henry Polkinhorn, James Fraser, Robert S. Joran and Charles P. Wannell. The active pall bearers were selected from the Odd Fellows organizations and were Oliver Dutour, of the Grand Encampment; J.T. Petty, Grand Lodge; James H. Richards, Grand Canton; John Thaw, board of trustees; John H. Seiffert, Columbian Encampment, and W.H. Richards, Central Lodge. The remains were interred in the Congressional cemetery. The attendance at the services was large and included representatives of all the Odd Fellows bodies of the city, members of the Oldest Inhabitants' association and a large number of prominent citizens.

| Morgan              | Commodore Morgan entered the Navy in 1808, and was excelled in courage and activity by no one of the brave young spirits who bore a part in the glorious naval actions of the ware of 1812-15. Though very young, he distinguished himself in the action between the United States frigate Constitution, and his Britannic Majesty's frigate Guerrier, the most important naval engagement during the war. Twice appointed to command the United States naval forces in the Mediterranean, he discharged his duty in these important trusts with honor to himself and advantage to his country. He governed those under his orders not by operating on their fears, but by well-directed efforts to elevate them in their own estimation, by reasonable indulgences, and the dispensation of equal justice.

Commodore Morgan was a native of Virginia, a nephew of his illustrious namesake, the brave Gen. Morgan, of the Revolutionary army; and in all the qualities of a gallant and noble officer and gentleman, he was worthy of his blood and of his chivalric profession. He has left a devoted wife and two sons to mourn his loss, and, as he was esteemed and respected by all who knew him, his death will be lamented by all with whom he ever served, from the highest to the humblest.

The Funeral of the late Commodore Morgan will take place this afternoon from the Navy Yard, at half past 3 o'clock precisely. The following officers will act as pallbearers:

- Com. Shubrick
- Com. Skinner
- Com. Smith
- Capt. Montgomery
- Gen. Henderson, M.C.
- Capt. Terrett, M.C.
- Gen. Totten
- Col. Albert

The Evening Star, January 7, 1853

The Funeral of Commodore Morgan took place yesterday afternoon at the appointed hour, from his late residence at the Navy Yard, with the usual honors. Minute guns were fired during the passage of the body to the Congress burial ground. A strong corps of Marines escorted the remains, which were also attended by the officers of the Navy and Marine corps. The pallbearers consisted of the officers named in yesterday's paper.

Dictionary of American Biography

Charles W. Morgan, naval officer born in Virginia in 1790; died in Washington, D.C., January 3, 1853. Entered the Navy as midshipman, January 1, 1808. He was commissioned Lieut., March 3, 1813, commander April 15, 1820 and captain February 21, 1831. While he was Lieut. he served on the Constitution during her cruise in 1812 when she fought the Guerriere and Java. For his gallantry in these engagements he was presented with a sword by the legislature of Virginia. In 1841-43 he was in command of the Mediterranean squadron.
The Death of the Late E.C. Morgan

At 2 o'clock this afternoon, after proceedings in the Surrat case (John Surratt) had been suspended, a meeting of the legal fraternity was held in the courtroom, to take action in reference to the death of the late Edwin C. Morgan, which was generally attended.

The meeting was called to order by District Attorney Carrington, on whose motion Mr. Joseph H. Bradley was called to the chair, and Mr. W.F. Mattingly appointed secretary.

Mr. Bradley briefly stated the object of the meeting to be to take action in reference to the death of one who over twenty years ago had been admitted to the bar -- a man of high character, honest, upright and faithful -- and who, during that time, was highly esteemed by all with whom he associated.

Mr. Norris moved that a committee of seven be appointed to draft suitable resolutions in respect to the memory of the deceased, which was agreed to, and the following were appointed: Mr. Norris, Judge Andrew Wylie, Judge G.P. Fisher, Messrs. R.R. Eindall, James M. Carlisle, W.D. Davidge, and E.C. Carrington.

On the return of the committee, Mr. Carlisle addressed the meeting, referring to the fact that it was more than four years since his voice was heard here, and it seemed to him the more fitting that it should be heard on this occasion. It happened during this period, because of neighborhood, that he had been in almost daily intercourse with two members of the bar -- Stone and Morgan. He felt like a man who had lost a friend on the right, and one on the left. These two men were in some things entirely alike, and in others, totally dissimilar -- one, a close reader of the law as laid down in the books, and the other impatient of the law. They were both honorable men. It seemed that with Mr. Morgan nature had fitted him for distinction at the bar, and he believed that no man ever, in the dust of the forum, failed to be impressed with his emnobling qualities. Mr. Norris read the following preamble and resolutions:

On the afternoon of Monday, the 27th inst., Edwin Cecil Morgan died at his residence, in this city, in the bosom of his own immediate family, surrounded by a large connection, to whom he was endeared not only by the ties of blood and affinity, but by all the qualities that strengthen and intensify the common bonds of nature. Beyond that immediate circle, the hearts of many friends, and especially of his brethren now here assembled, were filled with sorrow as the intelligence spread among them that they should see his face no more. He had completed his 40th year and in the pride of ripened manhood, when as yet no blight of autumn had fallen upon him, the grave untimely opened and received him. But though his feet shall tread the accustomed path no more, and though his voice shall never more be heard on earth, we, his brethren, will cherish his memory with affectionate respect, and keep alive the recollection of his clear and vigorous mind, his manly, natural eloquence, his quick intuitive sense of right, his abhorrence of all things mean and low, his unsullied honor, his frank and generous temper.

Resolved therefore, That this expression of our affection for our deceased brother, and of our sincere sorrow for his untimely death be by the chairman of this meeting laid before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at its next general term, with a request that these proceedings be entered upon the minutes of the court.

Resolved further, That a copy of these proceedings be communicated by the chairman to the family of the deceased, with the respectful assurance of heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved further, That the newspapers of the city be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

Mr. Norris, Gen. Carrington and Mr. J.S. Williams spoke feelingly of the life and character of the deceased, the resolutions were adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

Zevely, Douglass, Columbia Historical Society, April 14, 1902

On the northeast corner of Third and D Streets, with entrance on Third, there is a house which has not changed, excepting as to the entrance, since it was built by the late D. Wesley Middleton in 1831. It was his home prior to 1851 or 1852 and my father was the next occupant until 185, when Mr. Edwin Cecil Morgan rented the house and continued his residence there until his death in July, 1867.

Mr. Morgan, whose nephew, Dr. James Dudley Morgan, is so well known to this Society and in the medical profession, was born in this city, February 9, 1827, and at the time of his death, had been a prominent member of the District bar for several years. His office was in one of two small buildings which adjoined the old Fendall home and the site is now a part of the Fendall building. After Mr. Morgan's widow vacated this house in August, 1867, Mrs. Dr. Skillman, a daughter of Mr. Middleton's became the occupant.

Morrison, Col. James
d. 23 Apr 1823
Morrison. At his lodgings in this city, yesterday, Colonel James Morrison, of Kentucky, a gentleman of high character for probity and patriotism. [A more particular notice of his life and public usefulness will be hereafter given.]

The National Intelligencer, July 16, 1823

The following is an extract from the will of the late Col. James Morrison, of Lexington, Kentucky, by which he bequeathed so liberal a donation to the University of that State.

"I give to the trustees of the Transylvania University and their successors the sum of twenty thousand dollars in trust, to vest the capital in some permanent productive fund, and out of the annual interest or dividends accruing thereon to pay the salary of a professorship to be instituted by them and to be denominated the "Morrison Professorship," or to apply the said twenty thousand dollars to the purchase of a Library, to be denominated the "Morrison Library," as the said Trustees may think will best promote the interest of learning and science.

"And all my residuary estate beyond the sum of eleven thousand dollars, I give and devise to the Trustees of the Transylvania University for the benefit of that institution to be applied to the erection of another edifice for its purposes, to be denominated "Morrison College," in the town of Lexington."

The National Intelligencer, August 11, 1823
The Late Col. Morrison
In announcing, not long since, the death of Colonel James Morrison, of Kentucky, we suggested that a more copious notice of the deceased would probably hereafter appear. The delineation of Col. Morrison's life and character, which has recently been published in the form of an admirable discourse, delivered in Lexington, Kentucky, by President Holley, of the Transylvania University, is so complete, that the following abridgment, by the hand of a friend of the editors of some passages of the work, cannot but be gratifying to many of our readers:

Col. James Morrison, the son of a poor but worthy and respectable emigrant from Ireland, was born in the year 1755, in the county of Cumberland, in Pennsylvania. He continued with his father in the usual employment of agriculture, till towards the close of his minority. He entered early into the service of his country, and was for several years a soldier in the war of the Revolution. He was one of the select corps of riflemen that made itself so formidable to our enemies, under the command of the celebrated Col. Morgan. He was in those hard fought battlers near Saratoga, which, terminating in victory, caused the capture of Burgoyne and his whole army. On one occasion, in the autumn of that memorable year, this rifle corps fought nearly the whole day--so that before sunset, so obstinate and sharp was the combat, the field was four times taken and re-taken. Tradition, which yet supplies the absence of the written truth, recounting the deeds of this immortal band, assigns to Morrison an ample share in its hardships, merits, dangers, and triumphs.
With the fatigues and privations of a hunter's life, also, he was afterwards familiar; and in such career, when savage hostilities ensued, Morrison's signal bravery and self possession often enabled him to baff le or surpass the stratagems and surprises of Indian warfare. After peace became established, and the United States assumed their high rank among nations, Morrison having settled himself at Pittsburg, in his native state, became the first sheriff of the County of Alleghany. Here he continued to reside for several years, distinguished for his social virtues by a wide circle of admiring friends. During this period, he was married in his native county at Carlisle: and soon afterwards he formed and executed the determination of removing to Kentucky. In 1792 he entered into business as a merchant in the town of Lexington, and here met with that success which crowned all the subsequent acts of his life. In 1795 he was appointed by Governor Shelby Commissioner for assigning lands to the settlers south of Green River. In 1797 he was elected in Fayette County a Representative to the Legislature. Soon after this, he was appointed supervisor of the United States revenue for the district of Kentucky. From that time to a recent period, and more especially during the war of 1812 he has been successively engaged, chiefly by the National Executive, in offices both of trust and profit, extensive and highly responsible; all of which Col. Morrison has executed with unspotted integrity and uncommon success. The last situation, however, which he filled, was of a different nature from any of the former. He was appointed Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the young but flourishing University of Transylvania. To the peculiar duties of this new office, and the advancement of this excellent institution, when it was in its infancy but feebly supported, he applied all the energies of his sound and seasoned mind. And, while engaged in this most laudable service, he seemed insensible to bodily infirmities--and to know neither repose or fatigue. The University of Transylvania, thus cherished like an adopted favorite child, was not forgotten in his will, but has been recognized and honored as his most distinguished legatee. He correctly felt that the chief value of truth, liberty, humanity, religion, and immortality, depends on a well directed education; on a rational and moral formation of character; on the illumination and improvement of the mind; and that, without this, they would be unable to bestow that diversified and perfect happiness which is requisite to satisfy the inexhaustible and ever-expanding faculties of the soul.

As it was destined that he should die at a distance from his own town and home, he could not have chosen, had the privilege been allowed to him, a more appropriate place; one more gratifying to his patriotism, or to his laudable regard to his name and his character, than the City of Washington. There his ashes sleep, near to the sepulcher of the Father of his Country, and on the very spot where that great man fixed the seat of Empire. So few of our Revolutionary worthies are now to be found in the walks of our busy and protected life of domestic pursuits, and so numerous and unquestioned are the fruits of the wisdom and labors of the generation that made us free and independent, that the halo around every useful man of that glorious day, becomes peculiarly bright and far-darting--and while it catches all eyes, assembles about the possessor respectful, admiring and sympathetic friends. This charm, as might be expected, surrounded Morrison in his last sickness. He was an old and intimate friend of our excellent Chief Magistrate, and could claim, as he received, every courtesy and delicate as well as faithful service at his hands. In addition to this, he had the cordial and devoted attentions of his friend, an eminent counselor, and distinguished statesman, H. Clay, Esq. his confidential and constant adviser--one who, knowing the thoughts of his mind, and the wishes of his heart, could administer more varied and effectual consolation, than perhaps any other individual, if we except his faithful and affectionate wife, who fortunately arrived in Washington several days before his dissolution. But the prescribed limits of the Intelligencer admonish us to sum up the character of this Revolutionary patriot abruptly: As he was benevolent and amiable we loved him; as he was industrious, intelligent, useful and successful, we respected him—as he was hospitable and generous, we applauded him—as he was philanthropic and munificent, we admired him—as he was honest, candid, faithful and religious, we revered him—as he was our friend and benefactor, the patron of learning, the supporter of good morals, the defender of sound principles, and the advocate of every valuable measure, we will gratefully remember him, and embalm his name with the virtuous.

Of Lexington, Kentucky, died in Washington, D.C., April 23, 1823. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and Heitman registers him as an ensign, Eighth Pennsylvania from 21st of December, 1778, until he retired January 1, 1781. Colonel Morrison settled in Lexington, Kentucky, in 1792, and became a man of great wealth and founder of Morrison College in Lexington. He was state representative from Fayette and Quartermaster-General. The only record on his monument of military service is the title "Colonel".

Moulder -- Grand Master, 1826-27, 1830, 1832, 1838

Brother Moulder was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in May, 1792, and was a grandson of John Nicholson, an associate and friend of Robert Morris, of Revolutionary fame. He was a man of unusual intellectual attainments, a public-spirited citizen, a valued officer in the Federal and local municipal government, and as a Mason gave to this jurisdiction without stint for many years the best of his talents.

In his early manhood he conducted a school in Philadelphia, but spent the greater part of his life in Washington as a resident of the old First Ward, having his home on I between 21st and 22d Streets, N.W., but later moved to the Third Ward and lived on the east side of 9th between I Street and New York Avenue.

In the government service he held for many years a responsible position in the office of the Second Comptroller, and was Comptroller of the Currency under President Andrew Jackson, who was a personal friend. In his capacity as a citizen of Washington he served as Alderman in the First Ward from 1817 to 1819, and again in 1825 and 1826, was also at one time a member of the Board of Common Council, was for a number of years a Justice of the Peace, and was President of the Union Fire Company in its early days.

Originally a member of Columbia Lodge, No. 3, of this jurisdiction, he filled the station of Master there from 1821 to 1827, inclusive, and in December, 1825, was elected to the Grand East without previous service in any of the subordinate offices of that body. During his second term in 1827, he granted a dispensation for the formation of Hiram Lodge, and in 1828 withdrew from Columbia, entered the former lodge and was immediately called to the East in that body. Subsequently, as stated above, he served for four more years as Grand Master.

During the first year of his incumbency (1826) of that office he laid the cornerstone of the first Masonic Temple ever erected in Washington in which the Grand Lodge was actively interested, the building on the southwest corner of Indiana Avenue and John Marshall Place, which is still standing, and the history of which is given in detail in other pages of this work.

On this notable occasion he delivered an address which is a model in its class and may be found in the Grand Lodge Proceedings for the year 1826.

He was a member of Washington R.A. Chapter, No. 1, and served that body for two terms as High Priest.

From a letter of condolence, written by a committee of Washington Chapter, to the widow of Brother Moulder, and dated January 18, 1839, we quote the following extract: For upwards of twenty years our friend and Companion John N. Moulder, Esq., was connected with the Order of Free Masonry in this city, and for a considerable portion of that time was a distinguished officer and member of this Chapter (having twice been elected to the office of Most Excellent High Priest). We, Madam, knew him well, and improve this opportunity to bear cheerful testimony to his kind and courteous manner, the dignity with which he presided over the Craft, the avidity with which he voted favorably on every case of distress, and the haste which sped his willing feet, by day or night, to relieve the wants of the suffering. These were characteristics in John N. Moulder which never can be erased from the memory of his Companions.
That his private life was above reproach is shown by a communication from Brig. Gen. John M. Wilson, U.S.A., retired, a grandson, who, while never having seen his grandfather, recalls the conversations of his mother in which she described the superb character and lovely home-life of her father, a beautiful and sufficient tribute to his memory.

He died in this city, January 7, 1839, and his remains were interred in Congressional but later removed to Oak Hill Cemetery.

With Oriental Rites

Funeral of Moy Joe to be Held Tomorrow

Chinese Symbols to Decorate the Coffin and Feast Will be Ready at the Grave

With every touch of the orient which can possibly be added to a Washington funeral train, the body of Moy Joe will be taken to Congressional cemetery tomorrow afternoon. All the relatives and friends of Moy Joe—and there are a great many of them—will follow the hearse. Moy Joe's body will rest in a coffin decorated with Chinese symbols wrought of paper flowers and odd-looking inscriptions on odd paper of far eastern make.
One of Moy Joe's countrymen will ride upon the hearse and will make a startling figure as he scatters imitation money to the four winds of heaven. He will be "buying off" the evil spirits, who might otherwise interfere with the passage of Moy Joe's spirit to its rightful resting place.

At the grave a grand feast will be found waiting for the spirit before it takes its journey across the mystic chasm. There will be roast duck, roast chicken, sweetmeats, rice and tea, and there will also be a fire built somewhere near the grave. The last is one of the Chinese customs used at all funerals.

Moy Joe was at one time a laundryman, but he made enough money to sell out and retire to the Chinese quarter. He developed tuberculosis and, learning the probably outcome of it, he devoted his time to every effort possible at prolonging his life.

He died Thursday at Sibley Hospital.

_The Evening Star_

He had known Moy Joe, for the man had fluttered back and forth, hesitating between his own gods and Dr. McMasters' God for many months before he finally decided to shave off his queue and become Christian. So he could speak about Moy Joe with some feeling—and he did.

Old Chinamen Amused

Then three boys—Moy's own countrymen—sang a hymn. A gray queued Chinaman, leaning against the back of the chapel, laughed and said something aloud to another old Chinaman half way up the aisle, who turned and grinned. They took no interest—they were Moy Joe's friends, and had known him in Canton—but Moy Joe had turned Christian and had broken away from everything that had held him a friend to them.

And then Yee Li, a very small China boy stood up and read something from a book. He, too, spoke his own tongue. He stood very near the open coffin, and now and again looked into it. The half dozen Chinamen from the Sunday school, who had come with American clothes, paid strict attention to him. The older men, those who have not yet broken away from the religion of their fathers, listened to him with apparent unconcern.

A young man standing up near the back of the chapel asked a gray old Chinaman what the boy read:

"Him cracy," said the old man.

"What is he reading," asked the young man of another Chinaman.

For an answer he got a shrug.

She Knew

A woman who had been shifting noisily about, craning her neck to see what was going on said she knew what the boy was reading:

"He's reciting a Buddhist prayer," she volunteered in a loud whisper.

"Ain't it a shame?" replied a companion who had just dropped in out of sheer curiosity.

"Sly things," murmured the other one.

"The Buddhist prayer" that Yee Li was reading slowly and with all the feeling at his command was the Twenty-third Psalm.

Six Chinamen carried the coffin from the chapel to the street. On the sidewalk another curious crowd stood. Some of Moy Joe's native friends crowded into the three carriages provided and the little procession started toward the cemetery.

An Old Friend's Tribute

As the drivers clucked to their horses one of the gray-queued Chinamen who had known Moy Joe before he had become a Christian ran out to the curb with a bundle in his arms. The hearse stopped. The old man who had smiled at the Christian prayer and had paid no attention to the service or the flowers handed up to the driver a basket in which were tea and rice, a bottle of Canton rice wine of a kind so rare that it is scarcely ever seen in America, and sweet meats.

This was the old man's tribute. It was like the things they had put on the grave of Moy Joe's father and his mother and their parents and grandparents in China for countless generations back. The old man did not understand the flowers—nor the Twenty-third Psalm—but he knew the ways of his kind, and when they put those few sweet meats of his on the grave it expressed exactly as much as it does when some one else puts thousands of American Beauties at the door of some tomb.

Funeral of Sam Moy, Interment Tomorrow of Chinaman Who Committed Suicide
All that is mortal of Sam Moy, the Chinese laundry man who committed suicide Saturday by hanging himself, as printed in the Sunday Star, will be buried in Congressional cemetery tomorrow afternoon. The hour at which the funeral is to take place has been fixed at 2 o'clock, but a change may be made in the hour before tomorrow. When friends and relatives of Sam learned of the suicide they hurried to his business place to prevent the removal of the body to the morgue.

"Don't like looks of dead house," remarked one of Sam's friends. "Put all kinds of people in there and no good place for a Chinaman."

They succeeded in their efforts and the remains of their friend and relative found room at the undertaking establishment of J. William Lee, 333 Pennsylvania avenue. Moy was dressed and his body placed in a casket.

There was a time when the funeral of a Chinaman in this city attracted a curious crowd of persons to the cemetery, but so many of the almond-eyed celestials have died and been buried here that such funerals are no longer a novelty. Chinamen dislike publicity at funerals of their countrymen and they invariably try to hold the ceremonies at an hour when they think there will be but a few curious persons at the cemetery. The distribution of imitation money along the streets between the undertaking establishment and the cemetery always attracts the small boys, who pick it up as fast as it is dropped. Then at the grave comes the interesting ceremony of offering good things to tempt the evil spirits and the destruction of garments and other personal effects of the deceased. Some time in the future all the bodies of Chinamen that are buried here will be disinterred and the bone's removed to China. Most of those who have died in this city had wives in their native land, and the widows hope the bones of their loved ones will reach China before they have passed away.

Funeral services for Alexander Richmond Mullowny, former judge of the District of Columbia Police Court, who died Monday at his home, 6300 Connecticut avenue, were conducted at the residence this afternoon. Rev. Dr. James W. Morris, assistant rector of the Church of the Epiphany, officiated. Interment was in Congressional Cemetery.

The list of honorary pallbearers, headed by Judge Isaac R. Hitt, included Assistant United States Attorneys and other close friends and associates of Mr. Mullowny. Members of B.B. French Lodge of Masons were active pallbearers.

The following committee of the District of Columbia Bar Association was named to represent that body at the funeral: Jesse C. Adkins, Joseph A. Burkart, W.W. Millan, Robert Hardison, Judge Gus A. Schuldt, Judge Isaac R. Hitt, Richmond B. Teech, Walter C. English, Paul B. Cromelin and George C. Shinn.

Judge Alexander Richmond Mullowny, the junior member of the Police Court bench, is a trained lawyer, possessed of a ripe judgement, quick perception and a judge of human nature that enables him to easily determine the truth and falsity of the great bulk of evidence that daily comes before him for determination. His legal decisions are always sound and tempered with justice. He is no respector of persons by reason of social, financial or political status, weighing every case that comes up before him in the scales of justice that leaves no criticism possible.

A sort time after reaching his majority he was appointed Assistant United States District Attorney for the Police Court, in which position he served with marked ability for a number of years, until he was promoted to the bench. He is a native of Richmond, Va., where he was born August 24, 1864, being now 44 years old. He comes from a pure strain of old Irish stock that traces its ancestry back through many centuries. His father was a son of Commodore Mullowny of the United States Navy; his mother in her girlhood days was the belle of Washington. His father and grandfather were intimate personal friends of Daniel Webster, and on the occasion of his father's marriage the bridal party was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Webster at their bridal dinner in the Webster home, that stood on the east half of the present site of the Police Court D and Sixth streets northwest, then the most fashionable section of the city. Webster's home at that time was one of the finest in the city and the center of literary, art, diplomacy and statesmanship sets of the day.

Judge Mullowny some years ago organized the Irish Legation, composed of citizens of the District of Irish ancestry who could trace their lineage to the dim distance of the greatness of the Emerald Isle when it was governed by the old line of Irish kings. This organization meets annually on Ireland's Patron Saint day--March 17--to discuss a royal Irish dinner, genealogy of the race and their line of ancestry. He is prominently identified with the Masonic Order, being a member of Benjamin B. French Lodge, Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar, Washington Royal Arch. In addition to this, he is active in athletics as a member of the Columbia Athletic Association. In civic matters he takes a lively interest, being a member of the Business Men's Associations of this city.

He was educated in the public schools of this city and received his legal education at the National University of Law, from which he graduated in 1887 with the degree of B.L. He was appointed judge of the Police Court by President Roosevelt December 21, 1905, succeeding Judge Scott, who had died in office.

Personally Judge Mullowny is a genial young man, standing high with the bench and bar of the District, and enjoying the confidence and friendship of a host of friends in all walks of life, who pronounce him a royal fellow. On average he hears 10,000 cases annually.

Two Deaths at the East End
Mr. John Mundell, a well-known citizen of the Navy Yard, died of consumption, after a lingering illness at his residence, on 4th street east, yesterday, in the 65th year of his age. Mr. Mundell was born in Ireland in 1809, emigrated to this country in 1827, served 8 years in the regular United States army, and 25 years in the United States marine corps, and in the latter service he rose from the position of private to sergeant orderly sergeant, sergeant major, and quartermaster sergeant, serving in the Florida and Mexican wars. He has not been attached to the corps for several years past. He was a member of Naval Loge, No. 4, of the Masonic fraternity, and a past grandmaster of the Order in the District. He was an influential citizen of the eastern section of the city, with a host of friends, and leaves a large family to mourn their loss. His funeral will take place on Sunday.

History of the Naval Lodge, No. 4, F.A.A.M.
Joseph Mundell, Worshipful Master in 1850, was born in County Antrim, Ireland in 1809, and was of Scotch parentage. Coming to America when eighteen years of age he enlisted in the regular army in Philadelphia and served through the Florida War, reaching the rank of Sergeant; again enlisting in the U.S. Marine Corps, he was successively promoted through the various grades to the rank of Quartermaster-Sergeant, serving in all thirty-three years. While a member of the Marine Corps and after his retirement, he resided in Washington, taking an active part in public affairs. He died Sept. 9, 1874, leaving seven surviving children, six of whom are residents of Washington at the present time. His only Masonic affiliation was in Naval Lodge, he having received the first degree May 2, 1846; the second, Oct. 3, 1846; and the third, Oct. 17, 1846; and served as Secretary from 1851 to 1856. He was a consistent member of the Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, a zealous Mason, and a model citizen.

The National Intelligencer, Sept. 19, 1851
A melancholy occurrence took place on Wednesday evening, nearly opposite the Washington Navy Yard, by which a worthy family is involved in deep grief on the sudden and violent death of an interesting son.

It appears that a party, consisting of three men and two boys, all attached to the Marine Garrison, proceeded on a gunning excursion. There were but three guns. William Wells, a private in the Marine Corps, was extremely desirous to obtain from Samuel Mundell, the deceased, his fowling piece, which was repeatedly refused. On their arrival at the grounds of Mr. Atchinson, an altercation ensued between Wells and young Mundell, during which the latter raised his gun in a menacing position, when Wells sprung towards him, seized the piece with one hand, raised it as if he intended to knock the boy down, then fell back a short distance, cocked it, took deliberate aim and fired, lodging the contents of the gun in the left side of young Mundell's neck, breaking the collarbone, severing the arteries, and cutting the windpipe in two. The boy died instantly.
The party soon returned to the Barracks, and Wells candidly confessed the commission of the deed in terms which certainly reflected no credit upon human nature. The body of the unfortunate boy was brought in and laid out in the Garrison Hospital.

Justice Crandall was soon at the Garrison, after a brief hearing committed Wells to jail, whither he was conveyed by officers Wheat, Willett, and Adams.

This morning Mr. Woodward, the coroner, held an inquest, which resulted in the rendition of the following verdict: "That the said Samuel Mundell, aged fourteen years, came to his death by a gun-shot wound in the left shoulder, fired from a gun in the hands of William Wells, a marine, on the evening of Wednesday, September 17, 1851; the said Wells having fired at the said Mundell whilst under the influence of passion; the said gun being wrested from the hands of said Mundell by Wells previous to his firing."

We understand that Wells was formerly in the Marine corps, and that he re-enlisted on the 16th June last. The records of the Adjutant's office show him to be a native of Baltimore.

Young Mundell is a son of Orderly Sergeant Joseph Mundell, universally respected as a most excellent officer and citizen.

It is understood that the funeral will take place from the Garrison, this afternoon, at four o'clock.

Criminal Court.

The trial of William Wells, a private of the Marine Corps, indicted for the murder of a youth named Samuel Mundell, on the 17th of September last, is now going on in this court. It will be recollected that the locale of the deed was on the south side of the Eastern Branch, opposite the Navy Yard, and, as has been alleged, the parties were out gunning, when Wells, asking to shoot at some object demanded of young Mundell his gun for the purpose, Wells having no gun of his own. On Mundell refusing and resisting, Wells wrenched away the gun by main force, and, pointing it at Mundell, shot him instantly dead. The case will probably occupy several days.

The National Intelligencer, February 10, 1852

Sentence of Death

Yesterday having been the day on which the answer of Judge Crawford was expected to the application of the counsel of William Wells (found guilty of the willful murder of Samuel Mundell, on the 17th of September last) for a new trial, that decision was accordingly made. The exceptions taken by the prisoner's counsel to the trial were all overruled by the Judge.

The Judge then, in compliance with the prisoner's expressed wish through his counsel to know the worst, pronounced sentence of death, the execution to take place on the twenty-third day of April next. The Judge, in performing this awful duty, addressed the prisoner feelingly on the circumstances of his crime, trial, present condition, and future prospects, recommending him to seek without delay his reconciliation with an offended God. The Court was filled with an auditory deeply impressed with the solemn scene.

Murray. On Thursday, October 5, 1882 at 12:30 o'clock a.m., John R. Murray in the 72d year of her age. Funeral from his late residence, No. 217, 4 1/2 street northwest, Saturday, November 7 at 10 o'clock a.m. Friends and relatives are invited to attend.

The death of Mr. John R. Murray, a well-known citizen of this District, took place last night about midnight, at the family residence, No. 217 4 1/2 street northwest, after a protracted illness. Mr. Murray was one of the old citizens of the District, being 72 years of age, and having lived here the best part of his life. He was formerly well known as an enterprising business man. He was a native of Charles county, Maryland, but when quite young moved to Culpepper Courthouse, Virginia, where he lived till 21 years old, when he went to Texas and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He returned and came to this city in 1843, where he commenced business on the site where Mr. Frank Hume's store is now located, on Pennsylvania avenue, between 4 1/2 and 6th streets, under the firm title of Murray, Randolph & Semmes. This business firm lasted one year, when Mr. Randolph drew out, and the business was continued at the same place under the name of Murray & Semmes, the last-named being the well-known grocer corner 9th street and Louisiana avenue. In 1848 Mr. Semmes opened a branch at the place where he is now in business under the firm title of J.H. Semmes & Co., the old business continuing under the same name twenty-one years. The partnership was dissolved in 1864, when Mr. Murray retired from business. He has ever maintained the confidence and respect of the citizens of this District, many of whom will be pained to hear of his decease. The funeral will take place Saturday.

The will of the late John R. Murray, filed in the register of wills office today, leaves to his son, R.J. Murray, and daughter, Ada Maria Bowers, as tenants in common, the title in the St. Marc hotel; to R.J. Murray, his writing desk, and to Mrs. Bowers the portrait of her mother and family bible; to Hugh T. Murray, he leaves lot 3, reservation A, southeast, corner of 4 1/2 street and Pennsylvania avenue; to Francis Edmund Murray, lot 35, reservation B (south side Pennsylvania avenue, between 4 1/2 and 6th streets); to Miss Annie White, lot 25, reservation 10, the family residence on 4 1/2 street, between Pennsylvania avenue and C street northwest. R.J. Murray is named as executor and is directed to expend $200, or so much as may be necessary, in erecting head and foot, stones of pure white marble, with base stone, and terrace about the graves of himself and wife. After the payment of all debts any personal property remaining is bequeathed to Francis Edmund Murray, and all the rest of the estate is bequeathed to the four children equally.

A Sorrowful Burden

About 5:30 o’clock this morning the sternwheel boat "National," Captain Cregg, brought up ten bodies, five women and five children; four colored children and one white child, the latter a little son of Joseph Reed, policeman; Mrs. Muse, whose husband lives on the corner of 7th and G streets southwest; Mrs. Julia Kelly, an aunt of policeman Reed's who had been visiting his family and was on her return to her home at Currioman. Three of the white women and the four colored infants were not recognized.

Mother's Suicide Due To Death Of Her Babe
Coroner Decides Mrs. Emma E. McLeod Intentionally Inhaled Illuminating Gas
Despondent because of the death of her infant child two months ago, Mrs. Emma E. McLeod, twenty-five years old, committed suicide by inhaling illuminating gas in her apartment at 124-1/2 Thomas street northwest last night or early today.
The fact that Mrs. McLeod had taken her life was discovered shortly before 10 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Alma E. Schmidt, her sister, who resides across the street, went to the McLeod apartments, which is on the second floor, last night. She was unable to gain admittance. Believing that her sister was out for a time she returned to her home.

Door Broken Open
About 9:30 o'clock this morning Mrs. Schmidt again went to the apartment. She was again unsuccessful in her efforts to gain admittance. Policeman Antonelli of the eighth precinct was called and he broke open the door.

In the kitchen of the apartment, which was filled with gas, the body of Mrs. McLeod was found. She had apparently been dead several hours. A gas tube was attached to an open jet and another jet was found open.

Coroner's Decision
Coroner Nevitt was notified and after an investigation gave a certificate of death by inhaling illuminating gas with suicidal intent. Mrs. McLeod is survived by her husband, a contractor, who is out of the city on business, and her sister, Mrs. Schmidt.

A Child Pushed Under a Street Car and Killed

In Baltimore yesterday afternoon, Hugh McLeod, 7 years old, son of Hugh Suille van McLeod; living at 50 Granby street, was playing with four or five other boys on the water mains that arch the structure. While the boys were clinging to the top of the main, car No. 22 of the Citizen's line, came along, and as it was passing, McLeod fell between it and the upright supports of the bridge. He then rolled under the edge of the car, but before the wheels had passed over his body, the driver, who had heard the cry of alarm, stopped his horses. The lad, it is thought, was crushed by the car steps, and badly injured internally. He was picked up by the driver, conductor, and officer Cain and taken home, and physicians were called in. The little fellow displayed considerable nerve under his sufferings, for one so young, and said the accident was not the fault of the driver, but of one of the boys on the water main, who had pushed him. He died about 9 o'clock last night. Mr. McLeod, father of the little boy, whose family lived here, lost his wife about one week ago. She was the youngest daughter (Alice) of Mr. James T. Adams, of South Washington, deceased, an employee for many years of the Treasury printing bureau. The remains of young McLeod will be brought to this city where his parents formerly resided, for interment.

<td>A fatal affray occurred last night at the corner of 7th street and Pennsylvania avenue between two printers named Wm. McMahon and George Hough. McMahon was terribly cut with a knife by Hough, one gash extending almost ear to ear, and the other extending from the right ear across the chest. Hough and McMahon, with two companions, James B. Nelson and J.W. Campbell, met early in the evening at Tip Hoy's restaurant, on 11th street, south of the avenue, and while in there Hough and McMahon engaged in a wrestling bout, in which McMahon worsted Hough. The men after leaving the restaurant, it appears, took drinks in other places, and Hough showed much bad feeling on account of the result of the wrestling bout. At the southeast corner of 7th st. and Louisiana avenue Hough and McMahon got into a wrangle, and Hough, according to the statements of Nelson, made a pass with his hand towards McMahon's head, and then ran down Louisiana avenue towards 6th street. Nelson saw McMahon stagger, and went up to him to ask what was the matter with him. McMahon said, &quot;I am done for this time, Jim.&quot; McMahon reeled and Nelson caught him and supported him to the city post office, where the wounded man fell to the ground. Nelson applied for assistance at the city post office, and then ran to police headquarters where he reported the facts. Meanwhile Dr. Toner was summoned, and did what could be done to make McMahon comfortable until the arrival of the police ambulance, which conveyed the wounded man to Providence hospital.</td>

It appears that Hough, after cutting McMahon, went to Miller's restaurant, corner of 6th street and Pennsylvania avenue, where he washed his hands. He then came out, and was standing on the corner when he was arrested by Officers Bast, Schulze and Montgomery, and taken to the seventh precinct station. He was sullen and uncommunicative, and, apparently, much under the influence of liquor. He denied all knowledge of the occurrence. Soon after being placed in a cell he fell asleep. A two-bladed pocket-knife, having one blade about three inches long and very sharp, was taken from him by the police. It was with this weapon, it is supposed, that the fatal wound was inflicted. A woman, who gave her name as Pearl Hough, was also put under arrest and held as a witness, because she said that she had been talking with McMahon. She was in Suplee's restaurant, near the post office when the affray occurred. It appears, however, from the statements of others, that she had no connection with the case.

Nelson's Statement

Nelson was detained by the police as a witness. He made a statement at police headquarters in the presence of his counsel, Mr. John A. Clarke, as follows:

"We met--that is, the man now lying in front of the city post office with his throat cut, his name is McMahon, and I--at Tip Hoy's restaurant on the west side of 11th street, below the avenue. This was between three and four o'clock this evening. The man who did the cutting (Hough) met us at Tip Hoy's, and remarked to McMahon, "I can down you," and McMahon retorted, "You can't down me." Whereupon they wrestled, and McMahon threw the assailant down upon the floor. We all left Tip Hoy's 'Shad' Campbell, Bill McMahon, the man who did the cutting, and myself. This was about 9:15 o'clock tonight. We walked down Pennsylvania avenue and turned into Louisiana avenue near the post office, and the man who did the cutting said to McMahon, "I will do you now," and simultaneously made a swipe with his hand toward McMahon's head, and immediately ran down Louisiana avenue toward 6th street, the southwest corner."

Death of McMahon

McMahon became conscious after being taken to the hospital, and when asked if he had cut himself shook his head. He sank again in a stupor, suffering from exhaustion, caused by loss of blood, and died about 4:50 o'clock this morning. Arrangements were made this morning for holding an inquest at two o'clock this afternoon.

The "Swiper" And His Victim

McMahon, the victim of the tragedy, came originally from Buffalo, where his mother resides. About two weeks ago he came to this city from Scranton, and has been employed occasionally in the composing room for the Post. His companions state that he was quiet and inoffensive, though addicted to drink.

Hough, who is charged with the murder, is a native of Alexandria, and has the reputation of being a quarrelsome and dangerous man when intoxicated. He left Alexandria about five years ago after cutting a man named Harman. He went south, and subsequently went to New York, where he worked at his trade. Recently he has been working in this city. He distinguished himself some time ago, it is charged, by shooting a colored man in Alexandria for refusing to drink, with him.

MacMahon's Body

was brought to the seventh precinct station from Providence hospital about 10 o'clock. It was encased in a plain coffin. The body was placed in the lodger's room.

What Hough Says

Hough was taken to Police headquarters this morning and photographed for the rogues' gallery. A Star reporter saw him in his cell this morning at the station house. He was lying on his iron bunk as if asleep, but jumped up when the reporter called his name.

"I do not care to make any statement," he said to the reporter. "My attorney, Mr. Carrington, has advised me not to say anything."

"It is stated that you said you knew nothing about the cutting?" said the reporter.

"I know nothing about it. All I know is that I left him standing at the corner, and that I did not do the cutting."

"It is true that you had words with MacMahon?"

"We had a wrestle in Tip Hoy's, and he threw me. There were no angry words, except, Tip Hoy's who told him that he would put him out if he did not behave himself."
"You had been drinking pretty deeply?"

"Yes; I had been drinking yesterday afternoon. I know nothing about the woman named Hough who was arrested," continued the prisoner. "We have no relatives, except two nephews of mine in Baltimore. I came from Alexandria, where my people lived and my father is living now. I am not a desperado," continued Hough, referring to statements made about him. "When a man is in trouble the newspapers all give him a bad name."

Hough is not a bad-looking man. He is about 32 years old of medium height, and rather stout build. He has dark hair and moustache. He stated to a Star reporter that he had been working for Gibson Brothers for three years. Hough bears himself very coolly. When arrested the police found blood-stains on his cuffs and collar.

The Woman, Pearl Hough
Pearl Hough, the woman who was detained by the police in connection with the case, stated to a Star reporter that she knew none of the parties and nothing about the affair. She supposed at first that it was another McMahon that was killed and she made a remark that she had been talking with McMahon and that led to her arrest.

The Witness, Nelson
Nelson, who was taken as a witness last night, was kept at the police station until the inquest this afternoon. He declined to talk today, saying he had been advised not to. He said he had unfortunately been mixed up in the affair by force of circumstances. The statement which he made at police headquarters last night, he said, was about correct." He appeared to be considerably affected by his situation and by the sudden and enforced abstinence from stimulants after his dissipation.

Members of the Typographical Union
were at the station this morning, arrainged to take charge of the remains. Some friends of Hough's were there and declared it as not at all settled who did the cutting. The party were all intoxicated and no one was sure that Hough was guilty of the cutting. J.W. Campbell, who was one of the printers with Hough and McMahon, was summoned as a witness today. He said to a Star reporter that he knew nothing of the cutting, as he left the party before McMahon was cut.

A Bad Man Only When Drinking
At Gibson Bros. Printing establishment, a Star reporter was informed that Hough was an unusually steady workman and bore a good reputation. He was especially liked on account of his pleasant disposition. He left the office yesterday at five o'clock, perfectly sober, having first got a ten dollar bill changed. His bad traits showed themselves only when he had been drinking.

An Incident of the Tragedy
About half-past one o'clock a postal clerk arrived in the city post office, and Mr. Samuel Norris, of the registry division told him of the murder. While Norris was describing the pools of blood in which the murdered man lay, the postal clerk fainted and fell to the floor, upon which Norris cried for help. The watchman thought it was an alarm of fire, so he put on the hose, and was about to drench the building. The clerks in the registered letter room began to run out, thinking the murderer was in the building. The cause of the excitement was however soon discovered. The postal clerk was restored to consciousness, and the clerks returned to their work.

The Inquest
At two o'clock Coroner Patterson held the inquest. Josiah Simpson, Albert Connell, James H. Walker, L.R. Fechtig, W.N. Croggan and J.M. Eggleston were summoned as jurors. There was quite a large number of interested persons present at the station.

After the jury was sworn the body was taken in charge by Mr. Bellew, the undertaker, and removed to his establishment opposite. A telegram has been sent to the mother of the dead man, in New York but as yet no answer has been received as to her wishes.

Before taking testimony, Drs. Hartigan and Hicking made an autopsy.

The Evening Star, September 29, 1884
The Hough-McMahon Homicide
Hough Committed to Jail--Funeral of the Dead Printer
The inquest over the body of William McMahon, the printer, who was killed Friday night, as it is charged, by George Hough, a fellow craftsman, was continued Saturday afternoon at the seventh precinct station after The Star's report closed. The testimony of Robert Hoy, in whose restaurant the deceased and Hough engaged in a wrestling match; Pearl Hough, who talked with McMahon before the tragedy, but knew nothing of the deed, and George C. Harris, the watchman who was present when Nelson brought McMahon to the city post office in a dying condition, was taken. Henry Hurley testified that he met these men on 9th street, one of whom was Nelson, and saw one of them sneak away. This man he thought did the cutting, but it was not Hough. Elmer McIntosh, who saw Nelson and McMahon at the post office, Dr. Hartigan, who made the postmortem examination, and Officers Bast and Schultze were also witnesses.

The jury returned a verdict that William McMahon came to his death at Providence Hospital on the 27th of September from his incised wounds of the neck, inflicted with a knife in the hands of George Hough. Hough was committed to jail.

McMahon's funeral took place yesterday from St. Aloysius church, Columbia Typographical Union No. 101 having charge of the ceremonies. The attendance was very large. Rev. Father Noonan officiated. The pallbearers were Messrs. D.W. Beach, Ed. Morgan, Hector Davidson, S.J. Phillips, William Durkin and Adrian M. Jones, all members of the typographical union. The remains were placed in the receiving vault at Congressional cemetery, in preparation to being sent to the home of the deceased in New York state.

Obituary

Died, on Saturday afternoon last, at the Irving Hotel, in this city, General John McNeil, a distinguished officer of the War of 1812. His arrival from Boston, where he is Surveyor of the Port, as but just announced to us when we were apprised of his death. This was sudden and unexpected to us, though we since learn that he has long been declining, and suffered much from a painful and protracted illness. He was born in Hillsborough, New Hampshire, and at the time of his death was in the 66th year of his age. In 1812 he entered the army as a captain of infantry, and served with great distinction in that second war of independence. In 1814 he belonged to the first brigade, commanded by Gen. Scott, which opened a most glorious career of arms, in crossing the Niagara Straits and encountering the British veterans of the peninsular war. At the battle of Chippewa McNeil commanded the advance of Scott's brigade, the 11th regiment, Col. Campbell having been wounded in the early part of the action. In crossing the creek the leading regiment of the column encountered a most murderous fire, by which, in a few moments forty men were cut down. He advanced steadily on, with Jesup's regiment next, and at the distance of thirty paces from the enemy they deployed into line; McNeil, of herculean frame and stentorian voice, called aloud, "Give it to them--take vengeance on them, boys." And again, at the battle of Bridgewater, he had the honor to lead the celebrated Scott's brigade into action, in the face of a British battery of nine guns. In less than an hour the whole brigade was literally cut to pieces. As Ripley and Portel's brigades came into action McNeil redoubled his energies; when the 22d infantry broke, (its Colonel, Brady, having fallen,) McNeil rallied and reformed it. At this period of the action his horse was killed by a cannon ball and himself wounded in both legs by canister shot, a six-ounce ball passing directly through his right knee. At the close of the war he was retained in the army, and served on the Lakes and the Mississippi till 1829, when he was appointed a commissioner to negotiate with the Sac and Fox Indians. At the conclusion of his mission he repaired to Washington, and subsequently resigned his appointment in the army, but only to serve his country in a civil capacity. He was appointed Surveyor of the Port of Boston, which office he filled till the day of his death.

The funeral of the deceased will take place on Tuesday afternoon; of the hour due notice will be given to the public.

William David McWhorter, MD (1838-1895)

By George Turberville McWhorter, Jr.

William David, eldest child of the Rev. William and Margaret M. Kyle McWhorter, was born December 27, 1838 at his mother’s home in Pontotoc, Mississippi. (Margaret had wanted her first child to be born there.) He grew up at Bachelor’s Retreat in Pickens District (now Oconee County), South Carolina. He received his medical degree from the Medical College of South Carolina in 1860 (the diploma was signed by Jeffersion Davis). In 1861 he enlisted in the C.S. Army as a surgeon to Company A, First South Carolina Rifles, commanded by Captain (later Colonel) William Livingston. Soon after, at Sandy Springs (Anderson County, SC) he was detailed by Colonel James L. Orr to the Medical Staff of his regiment (“Orr’s Rifles”) for the duration of the war.

He was married at The Hermitage in Fairfax County, Virginia, on the morning of November 27, 1866, to Miss Mary Jones Millan, daughter of George Washington Millan, Chief Justice of Fairfax County, and his wife, Mary Elizabeth Jones (Lee)
Millan. The Rev. E. T. Perkins performed the ceremony. (Theirs was a celebrated love affair, and their letters during the latter part of the Civil War have been preserved.) [Note: These letters were given to me by my Uncle George McWhorter, Jr., and writer of this particular portion of my book]. Family tradition asserts that William David and his younger brother, James Kyle, were campaigning in Fairfax County during the war and spotted two pretty girls seated on a swing on the front porch of The Hermitage, their pug noses showing coyly beneath their bonnets. The brothers vowed to return after the war to marry them. They did. [Note: Upon reading the manner letters in my possession written by James Kyle McWhorter, MD to his parents, it is clear that he was not interested in Virginia Millan initially, but was engaged to Hattie Lee Tumberville who lived nearby in Fairfax Co., VA, whom he met after the war, when he settled at Fairfax Courthouse with his brother, William David McWhorter, MD]. Mary’s sister, Virginia Lee Millan, became the wife of Dr. James Kyle McWhorter on June 16, 1869 (also at The Hermitage) shortly after he had received his medical degree from the University of Georgia.

Miss Mary Jones Millan was born March 19, 1844 at The Hermitage (home of her maternal grandfather, Thomas William Lee) in Fairfax County, Virginia. She died on March 5, 1895 in Washington, DC. [Note: In Henriques’ book about the Fairfax Medical Society, he claims that Mary died from cancer] less than two weeks after the death of her husband. According to a surviving granddaughter (Mary Louise Cockerille Buynitzky), the couple died in penury, his medical fees having been paid in “pigs & chickens” instead of cold cash, with no attempt on the part of the good natured doctor to collect outstanding debts. (No obituary has yet come to light, although I have written to the Virginia Medical Society, founded by Dr. W. McWhorter, for information).

Dr. McWhorter’s medical practice was confined chiefly to Fairfax County and Washington, DC. When and epidemic of diphtheria broke out in Fairfax, he was credited with saving many infant lives by publishing his famous “prescription” in the Fairfax Newspapers. He died in Washington, DC on February 20, 1895. He and his wife were buried at the Old Congressional Cemetery in Washington, DC.

Daughters: Eliose, Margaret Virginia (Wee-Wee), and Marie Jones McWhorter.

McWilliams, Dr. Alexander

75 yrs.
R32/26
The National Intelligencer, April 2, 1850

On Sunday morning, at half past eight a.m., Dr. Alexander McWilliams, in the 76th year of his age.

Dr. McWilliams was born in St. Mary's county, Maryland. He entered the Navy in 1801, and, having served during the Tripolitan war, resigned in 1806; since which time he has resided in this city in the practice of his profession. He was the oldest living practitioner of medicine in Washington, as he would have been the oldest surgeon in the Navy, had he remained in that service.

In all the relations of life he was justly respected. He was ever among the most forward in all enterprises for the benefit of the city, or for the diffusion of knowledge. He was one of the founders of the Columbian Institute as well as the National Institute. He spent his life in the unostentatious exercise of the impulses of his generous and noble heart, and in the indulgence of his free and strong tastes for natural science.

The Funeral of the deceased will take place from his late residence, near the Navy Yard, at four o'clock p.m. today. Friends and acquaintances are invited to attend.

Doctor Alexander McWilliams was another well-known citizen of the Navy Yard section who deserves mention. He was a skilful practitioner, and was one of the founders in 1819 of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia. His residence--on I Street between Sixth and Seventh-- is still standing. One of Dr. McWilliam's daughters married the late Dr. Noble Young, so long known to the citizens of Washington.

On Sunday evening last, after a short illness, Mrs. Ann McWilliams, wife of Dr. Alexander McWilliams, of this city, and daughter of Dr. Barton Tabbs, late of St. Mary's county, Maryland. It is only those who were acquainted with the amiable and exemplary character of this excellent lady, as a wife and a mother, who can appreciate the grief of her bereaved husband and family; and those to whom the other and recent domestic afflictions of this gentleman are known will feel for his last loss a double portion of sympathy. It is his unhappy lot to be able to say, with the poet--

Insatiate archer! could not one suffice?  Thy staff flew thrice, and thrice my peace was slain;  And twice ere thrice yon moon had filled her horn.

Died, on the 23d inst., aged 12 years, Master Clinton McWilliams, eldest son of Dr. Alexander McWilliams, of this city. The writer of this has witnessed that Providence, in gifting this youth with premature endowments of body and mind, with exemplary innocent of heart, amiable urbanity of manners, and a filial piety of rare occurrence, seemed to have destined him for the enjoyment of that happiness which the purest innocence only can enjoy. Be comforted, you afflicted parents! In raising so fair a flower to the fragrance and beauty of anticipated worth, you have given your country and your Creator in earnest, that your domestic happiness consists in fulfilling worthily your allotted destiny. Live and be consoled, for the most wise dispensations of an all-bountiful God! The friends and late school-fellows of the deceased are respectfully invited to attend his funeral at 10 o'clock, this morning.

Meacham, Col. Alfred B.
[Alfred B. Meacham who devoted his life to the cause of justice to the Red Man. Passed to his reward]

Death of A.H. Meacham

Mr. A.B. Meacham died last evening at Dr. T.A. Bland's residence on G street, near 12th, after a few hours' illness of apoplexy. Arrangements were being made today to hold funeral services tomorrow, at 3 o'clock in the Metropolitan M.E. church, of which he was a member. The interment will be in the Congressional Cemetery. Mr. Meacham was born in Orange county, Indiana, in 1826, and moved with his family while a boy to Iowa. In 1855 he removed to Oregon, which state he represented in the electoral college in 1872. He was appointed a member of the Modoc commission by Gen. Grant, and in the massacre in which Gen. Canby lost his life received seven bullet wounds he devoted his life to the cause of the Indian. His last public service was on the Ute commission, of which he was a member when he died. He leaves a wife and son now in Oregon.

India Agent Berry Safe

Ounay, Oct. 14, via Lake City 17--The Indian agent of the Los Pinos has taken refuge in Chief Sapovonaris' camp and refuses to surrender himself. Meacham has taken up his abode in the military camp, fearing the vigilantes from Gunnison City. An officer has been at the agency five days trying to effect the capture of the prisoner who has sent him two communications promising to surrender, but so far has failed to do so. As soon as the papers were served on the agent he gave the information to the Utes, who collected at the bridge across the Uncompahgre river, five miles below the agency, in order to rescue the agent from the officers. By his remaining all night at the military camp the Indians were foiled and the prisoner made his escape. The agency is in charge of the blacksmith. The agent has telegraphed to Washington for instructions as to the question of surrendering. Cline is in jail at Gunnison. Hoyt is looking for a copper mine on the Utah trail, one hundred miles distant. Holmes passed through here since dark on horseback, attempting to escape by way of the Lake City trail. He was recognized by the sheriff of Ouray county, and a party started in pursuit. The people of Colorado express a determination to have the prisoner if it takes all winter. The citizens are clamoring for the removal of Meacham and Berry from their official positions. If the military will remain neutral, the people of the border counties feel confident of their ability to settle the difficulty without either state or national interference.
coffin and packed in a case with charcoal and deposited in a vault hewn in the mountainside, near Los Pinos agency, whence they will be removed to this city, the residence of his parents.

The Friends of Col. Meacham, who is about to go west on the Ute mission, met last evening to take leave of him. Dr. T.A. Bland, at whose residence they assembled, spoke of the devotion of Col. Meacham to the Indian cause, and Mrs. Bland read an original poem, written for the occasion upon the thrilling events of the tragedy of the Lava Beds, where the colonel received seven shots out of twenty-one. Other poems by Mrs. L.S. Burke and Mrs. Lydia Tilton were read. A feeling response was made to these tributes of Col. Meacham that touched the hearts of all present. Mr. J.L. McCreery, Rev. Dr. Adams and Mr. Ireland of Oregon, each contributed to the occasion, which closed with a sumptuous repast tendered by Mrs. Bland.

The Crow, Sioux and Bannock Indians who have been at the Tremont House for some weeks are out nearly every night to an entertainment of some kind last evening. They were the guests of Col. Meacham at 508 13th street where Dr. Howland gave an interesting stereopticon exhibition.

Social Reception to the Red Men

A novel but very pleasant affair was the reception given by Major and Mrs. F.P. Hill, at the Tremont House, to the Indian delegations there, last evening from 8 to 11 o'clock. Among the large company present were Hon. J.C.S. Blackburn; Hon. Alonzo Bell, Assistant Secretary of the Interior; Colonel Ainger, city postmaster; Major Harmon, deputy Second Auditor, and several officials from the Indian bureau.

The Red Men

present included Two Belly, Long Elk, Medicine Crow, Plenty Coos, Pretty Eagle and Old Crow, of the Crows, all in full and elaborate Indian costumes; Gabriel Reville, Drifting Goose, Left Hand, Jintayne and Smily Shepherd, of the Sioux, in citizens' dress, and Ten Day, Tishe, Tisdimits, Grouse Pete, Capt. Jim, Jack Gibson and Jack Ten Day, of the Shoshone and Bannocks, in full Indian costume. On taking seats they held quite a reception, assisted by the agents and interpreters.

Literary and Musical

Col. A.B. Meacham, as master of ceremonies then directed the exercises which consisted of music by Mrs. Applegate and Mrs. Culver; recitations by Master Buckley, Mrs. Parkhurst, of Lowell, "Emily Hawthorn" Mrs. Wells; Mr. Stephens, of the Interior department, and Mrs. Dr. Bland; and remarks by Mr. Blackburn and others. During the evening the Crows and Shoshones gave specimen songs, and the delegations were presented to the company and some of them made short addresses, which were interpreted to the audience.

A Woman's Experience With The Sioux

Mrs. Fanny Kelly, who was for some time a prisoner of the Ogallalla Sioux was introduced, and she stated that she was treated by them with the greatest consideration and kindness, even while their children were starving. It was explained that while she was a prisoner, the "Sweet Lip Sioux," some of whom were present, attempted to buy her with a horse and send her to the white people. One of the other Indians with an exclamation of astonishment said "She worth two horses," an interruption which caused some laughter.

More Indian Talk

Drifting Goose said:--"I have been brought up to sing, and sing all night, but that is not what I have been thinking of. From what I have seen, I am ashamed of my old ways, and I want to go back and do as the white men do, I've got nothing but love for you all, and I want to shake hands with all of you." Centayne (the man that has a tail) and Left Hand also made addresses. The most interesting feature of the evening was a conversation between Old Crow, of the Crows, and Ten Day, of the Bannocks, in the sign language--a practical exemplification of the fact that there is among the uneducated a universal language. The gist of this conversation was that the Crows and Bannocks are friends, and friends of the white people too, etc. The entertainment was concluded with an elegant collation.

An Indian Council was held last night in the chapel of Lincoln Hall, under the supervision of Colonel Meacham. There were present: Colonel Adair and Mr. Ross, Cherokees; Judge Stidham, General Porter, and Mr. Hodge, Creeks; Colonel Brown, Seminole, and Captain Picket. Chief Joseph and Yellow Bull, Nez Perces, were also present, and made stirring addresses. There was a lively discussion on the transfer question. Remarks were made by Colonel Meacham, General Porter, Colonel Brown, Colonel Adair, and others.

The Indian Council Last Night

Lincoln Hall was well filled last night with an intelligent audience to listen to the talk of the Indian chiefs, Joseph and Yellow Bull of the Nez Perces, through their interpreters. Seated on the platform were Colonel A.B. Meacham, Mr. A.J. Chapman, Little Red, Chief William, Sam. Tom, Wass, and Unquipaquitz, of the Utes from the Los Pinos agency agency, Colorado, and U.M. Curtis, their interpreter; Colonel W.H. Adair and John Ross, of the Cherokees, and General Porter, of the Creeks. Colonel Meacham delivered a short address, explaining the object of the mission of these chiefs to this city, and then introduced Chief Joseph, who, through his interpreter, spoke for about forty minutes, detailing the experiences of his people in their recent conflicts with General Howard and the Utes in the Indian country and of the deceptions and cruelties practiced on them by the government after they had been driven out of their own country where they had been living for many generations. During the delivery of this account he was frequently applauded. Mrs. Dr. Bland read a poem on "Chief Joseph." Colonel W.P. Adair and General Porter made short addresses; after which Little Red, a Ute chief, was introduced, and made a brief speech, through his interpreter. A general hand shaking followed, the Indians appearing much delighted with the attention shown them.

Congress

The Senate had but a short session yesterday, yet an interesting one. We were gratified to see the move made by the enlightened Senator from California towards abrogating certain obnoxious laws in Kansas. Some conversation then ensued in regard to the resolution submitted by Mr. Clayton on Saturday last, when further proceeding on it was cut off by a message from the House of Representatives announcing the decease of the Hon. James Meacham, an esteemed member of the House from the State of Vermont. The message having been read, Mr. Foot, of Vermont, rose and pronounced an eloquent and impressive eulogy on the life and character of the lamented Representative, a full report of which is given under the appropriate head. Mr. Douglas (a native of Vermont) also paid a feeling tribute to the virtues of the deceased member; and then, in conformity to the resolutions unanimously adopted, the Senate adjourned.

In the House of Representatives the formal announcement of the death of the Hon. James Meacham, of Vermont, superseded all other proceedings for the day. Mr. Morrill, one of his colleagues, gave a graphic narrative of the most interesting events in the career of his gifted and much-respected friend, accompanied by a touching and eloquent tribute to his personal merits and public usefulness. Messrs. Howard, of Michigan, Etheridge, of Tennessee, Dickson, of New York, and Giddings, of Ohio, followed in well-conceived and feeling remarks; and the House adjourned, after adopting the customary resolutions of respect and condolence.

Died By His Own Hand
Sick and Despondent, Charles Mead, Veteran Fireman, Commits Suicide
Mind Probably Unbalanced by Suffering--
Member of the Force for Quarter of a Century
Charles Mead, whose long service in the fire department had impaired his health, and whose mind was probably affected, ended his life last night at his home, No. 447 I street northwest, by cutting his throat with a razor.

The unfortunate man, who was about 55 years old, had served on engines and trucks for nearly thirty years, and in all the department there was not a more trusted or a braver fireman. He had done service at almost every big fire in this city for a quarter of a century, but during recent months his health declined, and he had been confined to his room some little time, an almost helpless invalid. To increase both his mental and physical suffering, he was fast losing his hearing and he seemed to fully realize that in a short time he would become entirely helpless. Death was to him preferable to this condition of affairs. While it is stated he had expressed such preference, he never hinted an intention to take his own life.

Because of his long and faithful service, Chief Parris had put him on the watch roll of his company, track D, and this really amounted to pensioning him. While on this roll he really had no work to do, and was able to remain at home each night. Even this easy position did not have the effect of restoring his health, and recently he has been attended by Dr. Mayfield, one of the surgeons of the police and fire departments.

Could Not Respond
A friend of the fireman's called last night and spent some time with the despondent patient. Mead conversed but little and his illness seemed to be preying upon his mind very much.

When the visitor got ready to leave Mrs. Mead accompanied him to the front door. Just about this time an alarm of fire was sounded, and the ringing of the bells of the fire engines, as they went along Massachusetts avenue, were heard by the sick man. But he was unable to leave his home and respond to the alarm. The noise of the engines called to his mind more clearly the fact that he had answered his last alarm, and getting out of bed he went to the bureau and took his razor from the drawer. Standing there, perhaps looking in the glass, he used the sharp weapon and made an ugly wound, which extended almost from ear to ear. His wife, standing near the front door at the time, did not hear the noise caused by the falling of her husband, probably because of the noise made by the moving engines. When Mead had used the weapon he fell to the floor, his head striking on a stool, and then he rolled to the corner. It was in this position that Mrs. Mead found him when she returned to the sick room. There was a pool of blood on the floor, and the long, gaping wound satisfied her that there was not the slightest hope that he would live, if he were not already dead.

Shock to the Wife
Mrs. Mead had never before experienced so severe a nervous shock, but she managed to call a neighbor and tell him what had happened. The neighbor responded without delay and found that life was extinct. Chief Parris was sent for, and visited the house as soon as he returned from a fire. Policeman Wannell was also summoned, and made a report of the sad affair to the coroner.

Coroner Carr called at the house and made an investigation. From the circumstances he concluded that an inquest was not necessary, and gave a death certificate.

It is the opinion of friends of the dead man that his mind had become impaired by reason of sickness, and that he did not realize what he was doing.
Funeral Arrangements
The funeral of the dead fireman will take place tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock. A detail of thirty-two firemen, under Assistant Chief Belt, will escort the body to Congressional Cemetery. The services will be conducted by the Rev. Chapman.

Fireman Mead's Funeral
The funeral services over the body of Fireman Charles Mead, who committed suicide, as told in The Star, were held at his late home, No. 447 I street northwest, yesterday afternoon. The Rev. Chapman officiated, and a number of firemen and members of the Knights of the Golden Eagle, of which deceased was a member, were in attendance.

On the way to Congressional cemetery three engine houses were passed, and at each one the firemen were lined up on the pavement as a mark of respect to their dead comrade. At the cemetery the body was placed in the receiving vault, and was interred this afternoon.

Suicide By Shooting
Francis S. Mead, Canal Employee Takes His Own Life
No One Able to Assign a Cause--Deceased Was a Batchelor and Lived Alone
Francis S. Mead, harbormaster of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, committed suicide early this morning by shooting himself in the head. He had previously attempted self-destruction by inhaling illuminating gas.

The fatal shot was fired shortly before 7 o'clock and Mead died at the Georgetown University Hospital about two hours later. The dead was committed in a small room on the third floor of the Farmers and Mechanics Bank building at the corner of 31st and M streets northwest.

Mead was a morose temperament. His actions of late, while somewhat unusual, did not excite the suspicions of his friends. He was a bachelor, and practically lived the life of a recluse. For the past few days he spent but little time at his boarding house, 1219 32d street, and has not been regular in taking his meals at the place. He has also remained away from home several nights. He arose early yesterday morning and left his home without eating his breakfast or telling his landlady, Mrs. Henry, when he might be expected to return.

From what can be learned he attended to his duties as harbormaster yesterday. Nothing is known of his movements after he had completed his duties for the day. He did not, however, spend the night at his, home, but this fact did not cause any uneasiness to Mrs. Henry, as he had remained away all night at intervals previously.

It was stated by Mrs. Henry that Mead had been drinking heavily recently, but no notice was taken of it, as he was a man who attended strictly to his own business. It is understood that he returned to the office of the canal company late last night and slept there. He was seen walking about the third floor of the building at 6:30 o'clock this morning by Mr. William M. Smith, an employee of the Georgetown post office, as the latter was going to his place of employment.
Within a half hour thereafter George Patterson, the janitor of the canal company's offices, arrived at the building. The outside door was locked and everything was in proper order. The odor of gas was detected in the hallway, however, and Patterson began an investigation. In the bookkeeping room the gas was discovered to be turned on full force in an unlighted stove, and the fumes were very strong.

After turning off the gas and opening the doors to air the room, Patterson went upstairs to the portion of the building over the bank. In an ante-room adjoining the office of several of the officials of the company the unconscious form of Mead was found. His body was lying on a lounge and his feet rested on the floor.

Upon seeing the revolver on the floor and the blood flowing from the back of Mead's head, Patterson ran into the street and summoned aid. Policemen J.G. Walsh and J.S. Custer of the seventh precinct station were near by and quickly responded. The officers made an examination. They found a hole almost three-quarters of an inch in diameter immediately back of Mead's right ear. The pistol lying on the floor was found to be of .44 caliber, and resembled the bulldog pattern.

Conveyed to Hospital
The patrol of the seventh precinct station was summoned and Mead was conveyed to the Georgetown University Hospital with all possible speed. He was immediately placed on the operating table and the physicians did what they could, though the unfortunate man died shortly after 8 o'clock without regaining consciousness.

Nothing that would throw light on the tragedy was found on Mead's body or in the room in which he fired the fatal shot. No one could be found that would advance a cause for the rash act. Mrs. Henry, his landlady, was at an utter loss to explain the suicide. She stated that Mead had boarded with her for fourteen years. The loss of his mother several years ago, it is thought, preyed on his mind.

Mead was a lifelong employee of the canal company. His father, John W. Mead, who was also employed by the canal company, was killed, May 30, 1877, at the outlet lock through an accident caused by a derangement of the machinery which was used in letting the boats from the canal into the Potomac river. Mead was fifty-four years of age, and is survived by a sister, Mrs. Perkins, and a brother, both of whom reside at 1600 New Jersey avenue northwest.
James H. Mead was a blacksmith and later an iron railing maker on Capitol Hill. A known example of James' ironwork is one of the two surviving plot fences at Congressional Cemetery. The label on the lovely wrought iron fence reads: J.H. Mead, Maker

Mr. J.W. Mead Killed and Two Men Injured

A terrible and fatal accident occurred this morning at 10 o'clock at the new outlet lock, a mile above the Aqueduct bridge, in Georgetown, by which Mr. John W. Mead, assistant harbor master of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, was instantly killed, and two employees -- Sylvester Carroll, aged 17 years, and Michael Reynolds, aged 60 years, were severely if not fatally injured, the former having both legs broken and sustaining an injury to his left arm, and the latter having his right leg crushed below the knee. Carroll resides at Foxhall's place, near Green Springs, and Reynolds at the corner of 1st and Lingan streets, Georgetown.

Particulars of the Accident

The facts in the case, so far as they could be ascertained by our reporter, are as follows: A canal boat loaded with coal was passed into the caisson at this outlet, preparatory to being lowered into the river. The caisson is lowered on a railway and inclined plane at an angle of about thirty degrees, and for counter weight two cars loaded with two hundred and fifty tons of stone are placed on rails each side the caisson. As the caisson, loaded, goes down toward the river these cars ascend. Some slight signs of weakness were noticed in the machinery this morning while the caisson with its boat was being lowered, and the attention of the person in charge of the engine having been called to it, he immediately and suddenly brought the engine to a stop. It is supposed that this sudden stoppage caused an unnatural strain on the ropes, breaking them and precipitating the cars and caisson to the foot of the railways. The boat was not injured, and passed to the river with its occupants in safety. One of the cars in the descent struck Mr. Mead, who was walking behind it in its ascent, and when the ropes broke he had not time to get out of its course. It is supposed that the other sufferers were injured by the ropes, which were of 1 3/4 inch steel wire. The cars were completely demolished, and the entire machinery is more or less injured. Large cog-wheels of cast iron, bolts, rods and bars are scattered over the scene in great confusion.

The Body of Mr. Mead was recovered with difficulty, it being covered by the debris to a depth of four or five feet. His right leg was terribly mangled, and he had a severe cut penetrating the skull. He was injured internally.

Mr. Mead was an old and respected citizen of Capitol Hill, and with his family resided on 6th street, near B, southeast. He was an iron worker by trade, and for the past two or three years had been employed in the canal office at Georgetown and on the Georgetown division of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. He was about 55 years of age, and in old times was active in the volunteer fire department, and was also a member of the old Washington Light Infantry. He represented the fifth ward several times in the board of common council and for many years was assessor of the ward.

Cause of the Accident -- It appears that a safety brake had been removed from the caissons several days since, and for some reason had not been replaced. Two boats passed in safety this morning through the outlet, and no cause is assigned for the accident which overtook the third boat.

The Wounded Men -- Michael Reynolds was sent to Providence Hospital and Sylvester Carroll was taken to his home. Both were attended by Dr. Ritchie. The accident will be a serious drawback to the company, as most of the machinery is completely wrecked.

The Evening Star, May 31, 1877

The Disaster at the Outlet Lock -- Death of Another Victim

Yesterday evening the scene of the Outlet Lock accident, noticed in The Star, was visited by large number of persons. The body of Mr. John W. Mead was taken to the third precinct station house, and Dr. Patterson, the coroner, after viewing it, directed the police to summon a jury to appear this evening. The young man, Sylvester Carroll, was removed to his father's residence, on the Foxhall place and attended by Doctors Taylor, Lewis Mackrall, Bowie Taylor, Lewis Ritchie and James Mackall. After consultation it was decided that the only chance for his life lay in the amputation of both legs. One was taken off just above the ankle joint, and the other below the knee joint, but he survived the amputation only about one hour. Michael Reynolds was found to have sustained a compound fracture of the right leg, and severe injuries in the back. He was removed by Sanitary Officer Connell to the Providence hospital, where the amputation of the crushed leg was performed.
The Cause of the Accident

Mr. City, the engineer in charge, gives the following account of the accident. A few minutes before the accident occurred his attention was called by the peculiar motion of the brace between two of the sheaves, (wheels around which is the heavy iron chain works), but could not detect the cause of the trouble. His assistant, seeing his movement, and fearing something was wrong, began gradually to shut off the water, so that there was no sudden stoppage of the engine, nor was the iron rope broken at all, nor is it broken at the present time. Mr. City says he is also prepared to prove that the absence of the safety shoe brake was not the cause of the accident; because the shoe brake was by experiment found entirely inadequate to stop the counter weights if they had a start of only a few feet. It was only of value in case the weight jumped backwards—it was therefore abandoned—and in its stead men with chocks followed the weights, which work two of the men were doing at the time of the accident. It may then be asked why did they not stop the weights? The iron rope which pulls up the caisson, weights, etc., works around three large sheaves, (wheels,) which are fastened by heavy plates in solid masonry. This masonry, which fastened the journal of the wheel, broke first, the canting of that caused the rope to jump to the next smaller wheel, and when the rope struck the smaller wheel it broke it, and tore it away from the masonry. This made a slack rope—the weights then went at full speed beyond the power of the men whose duty it was to chock the weights. The cause then of the accident was either a weak plate in the wheel, which is fastened in the masonry, or a defect in the masonry itself.

Remarkable Presence of Mind

Many have asked, very sensibly, why it was that the canal boat and its occupants in the caisson escaped? It was all owing to the presence of mind of an employee at the lock, Mr. John W. Carroll, who, before the actual occurring of the catastrophe, seemed to know what was coming, and without any orders opened the gate of the caisson, and when the shock came the rebound shoved the boat on safely out into the river. The caisson was much strained and bent. This lock was built by Mr. H.A. Ramsey & Co. The coroner at half-past one o'clock went to the lock, and upon his return an inquest will be held at the station house.

The Evening Star, Friday, June 1, 1877

The Outlet Lock Disaster -- Death of the Third Victim of the Tragedy

Michael Reynolds, who was injured by the disaster at the outlet lock in Georgetown on Wednesday, and was taken to Providence hospital for treatment, died there yesterday, making the third victim of the accident. The Coroner's inquest over the body of Mr. J.W. Mead, who was killed outright by the accident (Sylvester Carroll, the second victim, died Wednesday night) was commenced at 1 o'clock yesterday, at the police station in Georgetown.

The first witness--Mr. Henry W. Denmead, superintendent of the canal company at the lock, testified that he had orders to assist Mr. City; that he turned over all the men at his disposal, and notified them that they were under the orders of Mr. City, who proceeded with the work, and put the first and second boats safely through the lock. The accident occurred on letting the third one through. Witness first noticed the unusual speed of the cables, and he made a remark about it to Mr. Mead, who was with him, and expressed his belief that something was wrong. Mr. Mead stepped on the counter-weight track, and witness caught hold of him and pulled him back to the main track, saying it was the safest place to be. Mr. Mead again stepped on the counter track, when witness again pulled him back, saying at the same time, "for God's sake, stay here." Witness was struck on the finger by a piece of flying material, and turning to see what it was, let go his hold on Mead and lost sight of him; next saw the rope throwing young Carroll against the counter weight, which knocked him down; saw Reynolds struck by the same rope; the counter rope sunk under Carroll, and the accident was all over; believes that the breaking of the keeper was the cause of the accident; because the shoe brake was by experiment found entirely inadequate to stop the weights? The iron rope which pulls up the caisson, weights, etc., works around three large sheaves, (wheels,) which are fastened by heavy plates in solid masonry. This masonry, which fastened the journal of the wheel, broke first, the canting of that caused the rope to jump to the next smaller wheel, and when the rope struck the smaller wheel it broke it, and tore it away from the masonry. This made a slack rope—the weights then went at full speed beyond the power of the men whose duty it was to chock the weights. The cause then of the accident was either a weak plate in the wheel, which is fastened in the masonry, or a defect in the masonry itself.

Mr. C.W. City, the superintendent of the contractors, testified that he was employed by H.A. Ramsey & Co., and was in charge at the time of the accident; was near the wheels (sheafs) at the time of the accident, and observed that the brace was vibrating more than it had ever done previously; as two journals of the sheaves had broken previously, he naturally looked for similar accidents; the great sudden jar was what caused the accident; had the bases been braced at the bottom the accident might have been avoided; as a machinist, witness considered it necessary to watch those large sheaves closely; on account of accidents having happened he was naturally suspicious; Mr. Ramsey had the contract for the work, but had been told there was nothing to be done without consulting Mr. Hutton, the chief engineer of the canal company; there had been no conflict between Mr. Hutton and witness; he took the brakes off about three weeks ago; Mr. Ramsey was present; it was a perfect Godsend that the brakes were not on; had they been on, the caisson would have been ruined and every one on the boat and caisson would have been injured; the brakes would have ripped out and would not have stopped the counter-weight trucks. Adjourned until this afternoon.

Injuries Are Fatal

Death of Frank Meade the Result of a Fall

Frank Meade, aged thirty-five years, living at 909 U street, who was injured yesterday afternoon by a fall from a scaffold upon which he was working at the time, at a house on Garfield avenue, died early this morning at the Garfield hospital, where he was taken shortly after the accident. His death is said to have resulted from a fracture of the skull. Following an investigation upon the part of Coroner Nevitt today, the latter refused to issue a certificate of death, as indications pointed toward negligence in properly handing the scaffold upon which the dead man was working at the time of the accident.

After his falling to the ground Meade's fellow workmen went to his assistance, and it was discovered he was suffering from a fracture of the right leg and a number of contusions and bruises about the face and head. He was later removed to the Garfield Hospital, where at first it was thought his injuries were not of a serious nature. Several hours later, however, the injured man's condition took a turn for the worse, and a second examination revealed that he was suffering from internal injuries and a fracture of the skull.

It was announced at noon today that an inquest would be held at the morgue at 3 o'clock this afternoon. Meade is survived by an aged mother living at Bennings, D.C.

Charles C. Meads, a prominent contractor and one of Washington's oldest citizens, died at his residence, 101 4th street northeast this morning. He was a member of Camp 171, Confederate Veterans, having served on the ram Merrimac during its engagement with the Monitor. He was always active in measures for the improvement of this section, being a director in several building associations, and frequently engaged as appraiser for these companies on account of his expert knowledge of real estate values. During the latter part of his business career he was engaged extensively on government and city work, having performed contracts at Fort Hunt, Fort Myer, Fort Washington, Soldiers' Home, Washington barracks, pension building and several city contracts, such as police stations and engine houses.

He is survived by three children, Charles Meads, an engineer and contractor of New York city; Mrs. Hattie Meads Smith, the well known soprano and Eugene Meads of the coast survey. The funeral will be held on 4th street northeast, Thursday at 2 o'clock p.m.

Meehan, late law librarian of Congress, took place this morning at 10 o'clock from his residence on H street and was attended by a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends. The body was enclosed in a handsome rosewood casket, with silver mountings, and the funeral service were conducted by Rev. Dr. Camp, an Episcopal clergyman, of Saratoga, N.Y., who baptized the deceased. The procession then proceeded to the Congressional cemetery, where the remains were deposited temporarily in the vault of D.W. Middleton, Esq. The pall bearers were W.D. Davidge, Commodore Almy, T.M. Smith, Major McDonald, A.R. Spofford, T.M. Hanson, and John Ingle.

The Evening Star, April 25, 1863

Death of Mr. Meehan. Yesterday afternoon, Mr. John Silva Meehan, ex-Librarian to Congress, died suddenly at his residence on south B street, Capitol Hill. Mr. Meehan was a native of New York, and had reached the advanced age of seventy-three years. In early life he was connected with the press, and at one time conducted a Democratic paper in the city, which was taken in charge by Duff Green when Mr. Meehan (during the first term of President Jackson) was appointed Librarian of Congress, which position he so acceptably filled for the space of thirty-three years. His funeral will take place from his late residence tomorrow afternoon.

pp. 355-357: Meehan, John Silva (1790-1863)

John Silva Meehan, printer, publisher, and Librarian of Congress, was born in New York City on February 6, 1790, and was educated there. He went to Burlington, New Jersey, in 1811 or 1812, to take part in the printing of Richard S. Coxe's New Critical Pronouncing Dictionary of the English Language, but in January 1815 was back in New York City, where he was warranted as a midshipman in the United States Navy. Assigned to serve aboard the Brig Firefly, he remained with that vessel until April, the restoration of peace with Great Britain having thwarted plans to cruise in the West Indies in pursuit of enemy commerce. He was offered a commission in the Marine Corps but chose to take up printing again and moved to Philadelphia. There, with Robert Anderson, Meehan began publishing a Baptist journal in 1818. After moving to Washington in 1822, the two began publishing a weekly newspaper, The Columbian Star, also under Baptist auspices.

In 1826, Meehan turned to the publication of a political journal and acquired the Washington Gazette. Renamed The United States' Telegraph, the newspaper was friendly to Andrew Jackson and John C. Calhoun. However, it soon became apparent that Meehan was not mounting the desired type of attack against the Adams administration, and the Telegraph was taken over by the dynamic and forceful Duff Green. After leaving the Telegraph, Meehan served for a time as secretary of the Board of Trustees of Columbian College. He is also said to have continued his support during this period for the election of Jackson in 1828.

On May 28, 1829, Meehan was appointed by Jackson as the fourth Librarian of Congress. Eminently acceptable on the score of his pat political loyalty, he was nevertheless careful throughout his long incumbency to avoid partisan activity. George Watterston (q.v.), whom he replaced, had been less so, and resorted unsuccessfully to a press campaign to set aside Meehan's appointment. For years thereafter, Watterston used threats, cajolery, and flattery in vain attempts to regain his former position.
Meehan was 39 years old when he became Librarian. He was 5 feet 7 inches tall, had brown hair, brown eyes, and a complexion tending toward the florid. By most accounts he was amiable, gentlemanly, precise, anxious to be of service, and a good businessman. The Library that he took over occupied the greater part of the central portion of the western front of the United States Capitol. Some 16,000 volumes reposed there, carefully arranged on shelves in the Library's alcoves according to the classification scheme inherited from Thomas Jefferson (q.v.). Meehan began his career in the Library with one assistant and gradually increased his staff to five, including his son, Charles Henry Wharton Meehan, who later was placed in charge of the Library's law department. The Librarian's salary was $1,500 in 1829 and eventually rose to $2,160. During Meehan's last year the Library (1861), the total appropriation was $17,000.

Two opportunities were presented, in 1836 and 1844, which, if acted upon, would have set the Library of Congress upon a course toward becoming the first library of the land. The first of these involved an offer to purchase the library, famed throughout Europe, of Count Dimitrii Petrovitch Buturlin. The price for this unique collection, consisting of 25,000 volumes and a number of valuable manuscripts, was in the range of $50,000 to $60,000, well below its true value. Although the support of the Joint Committee on the Library was given, a resolution favorable to the purchase of the Buturlin Library was rejected on the floor of the Senate. The loss of the Buturlin Library also had the effect of serving as a precedent for the rejection in 1844 of an offer to purchase the 10,000-volume library of the Durazzo family in Italy, considered one of the choicest private libraries in Europe. For all practical purposes, notice had been given that the Library of Congress was to remain a legislative library and that proponents of a national library would have to look elsewhere.

Meehan appears to have played no role in the attempt to acquire these two collections. This passivity was in keeping with his view of the Librarian as a creature of Congress, whose bidding he was always careful to do. Meehan's most significant encounters, understandably, were with the members of the Joint Committee and particularly with its chairman. In 1845, at a time when the Library was described in a guide book as consisting of "about forty thousand volumes, in a large and elegant room, and disposed in order by an excellent librarian," Senator James Alfred Pearce of Maryland came to the Committee. An era of extraordinarily close collaboration between Pearce and Meehan was thereby inaugurated, although there was never any question of the deferential nature of this relationship. Pearce, in fact, must thenceforth be considered as the dominant figure in Library affairs.

The legislation establishing the Smithsonian Institution in 1846 contained an interesting provision relating to federal copyright law that had the potential of greatly enriching the Library's collections. According to this provision, one copy of each book, map, chart, musical composition, print, cut, or engraving produced in the United States was to be placed in the Library of Congress. However, the implementation of this grand scheme for building national library resources was hindered by practical difficulties and impeded by differences of opinion. The legislation itself was faulty because it failed to provide Meehan with any means of compelling copyright deposits to be made, and, furthermore, the actual validity of a copyright did not appear to depend on a deposit. Meehan, who had many routine duties to perform and who found the processing of copyright deposits burdensome, did what was expected of him but was otherwise unenterprising. In 1859, the copyright provision, insofar, as it involved the Library of Congress, was repealed.

The most dramatic event of Librarian Meehan's long incumbency occurred on December 24, 1851. Sometime before 8 o'clock on that morning, the Library Room was reported to be on fire, and in a few hours' time it was almost totally destroyed. An estimated 35,000 volumes were lost, including two-thirds of Jefferson's library; some 20,000 volumes, many of which were housed in adjoining rooms, were saved. A few buckets of water would have been enough to extinguish the flames at the outset, but the rapid and extensive spread of the fire soon carried the situation beyond all control. No blame was ever attached to Meehan for the catastrophe, and plans were made almost immediately for the reconstruction of the Library Room and the acquisition of the books to stock it. Congress responded in both instances, voting special appropriations that eventually amounted to $85,000 for the purchase of books and $93,000 for the restoration of the Library Room. On July 6, 1853, Meehan took formal possession of the restored Library Room. On July 6, 1853, Meehan took formal possession of the restored Library, thought by some to be one of the most beautiful rooms in the world. Meehan was preoccupied over the next few years with replacing the lost books, but for the most part, he moved cautiously, relying upon the Library's earlier catalogs in preparing his want lists, and dealing almost exclusive with the firm of Rich Brothers in London. Some opportunities were presented for enlarging the Librarian's powers at this time, but Meehan preferred to follow the more modest tradition of working closely within the framework of the Library Committee. As a result of the special appropriations of 1852 and annual appropriations of $5,000 thereafter, the Library grew rapidly in the years after the fire, and in April 1856, Meehan was able to announce to Senator Pearce that 36,000 volumes from those catalog-based want lists had been purchased and that the losses had been entirely made good.
The international exchange of duplicate library materials as a means of enlarging and enhancing the collections of the Library of Congress was first promoted before Congress in 1840. The idea originated with Alexandre Vattemare (q.v.), a French citizen who had already achieved some success with this form of cooperation in Europe. He found favor with Congress, and Meehan was authorized to participate. However, the Librarian, who held a low opinion of Vattemare and believed in more traditional channels of acquisition, did not actively prosecute the international exchange program. Vattemare returned to the United States in 1848 and broached more ambitious plans, for which he again received congressional approval. The program now began to show some results, but growing distrust of Vattemare (not only by Meehan but by other American librarians and by French officials as well) and the poor quality of some of the materials received through Vattemare's agency led in 1853 to the abandonment of the exchange program.

Four printed catalogs of the contents of the Library were prepared by Meehan and his staff--in 1830 (258p.), 1839 (747p.), 1849 (1022p.), and 1861 (1398p.). A number of supplementary catalogs issued in intervening years tended to add to the cumbersomeness of a system based on the increasingly outmoded Jeffersonian classifications. Although Meehan never undertook it himself, one attempt was made at the Library of Congress in 1853 to carry out a wholesale reformation of cataloging through the preparation for stereotype plates for titles of the volumes in the Library. The brainchild of Charles C. Jewett (q.v.), librarian of the Smithsonian Institution, this system, by eventually taking account of the catalogs of other libraries, was promoted as a means toward central, uniform cataloging. Appropriations failed, however, and Jewett, who had continued to guide the stereotyping program, was dismissed from the Smithsonian in 1854. Lacking such essential support, the program soon faltered and came to a close.

Meehan experienced few serious threats of removal during his many years as Librarian. It had been his practice to remain cautiously non-political throughout his public life, and he had his record of survival to show how successful he had been. With the election of Lincoln in 1860, however, Meehan found himself in a difficult position. Senator Pearce, with whom he was so closely identified, had left the Whig party in 1856 to become a National Democrat. Although Pearce was a Unionist, he was also a Marylander, representing a state that was generally pro-Southern, and he found himself unable to declare boldly and clearly for the Union. As far as the Library of Congress was concerned, this meant a diminution of the chairman's influence. As far as John Silva Meehan was concerned, it meant the end of his long career. Although there were rumors of pro-Southern sympathies on the part of Meehan, no evidence exists to this effect. Ainsworth Rand Spofford (q.v.) later was to say that Meehan had been removed only because he was "a very ancient fossil." Senator Pearce tried to intervene with Lincoln in Meehan's behalf, but o no avail, and John G Stephenson (q.v.), an Indiana physician, replaced him on May 24, 1861. Meehan took his dismissal calmly and without rancor.

His retirement was not entirely untroubled, for his successor prepared an elaborate report for the Joint Committee detailing the shortcomings of the Library. Beyond the criticism leveled at him at the conclusion of his almost 32-year administration, some has followed him throughout the years, based on the broad grounds that Meehan and those others who had influence and authority in Library matters were willing to settle for too little. The history of the Library over the period 1829-1861 appears to be a chronicle of lost opportunities, opportunities for the enhancement of the Library through international and domestic exchanges, through the vigorous observance of copyright provisions, through timely special purchases, and by other means as well. Vision, imagination, and vigor seemed to be lacking, particularly concerning matters that by their very nature would have placed the Library on the road to becoming a true national library. Yet, given the reality of the situation which involved the general apathy of Congress where Library affairs were concerned and which must take account of the measured manner in which the powerful Senator Pearce controlled the Library, it is not so surprising that it was, and remained, a legislative library, the kind of library that Congress wanted.

Meehan survived in retirement for approximately two years, dying of apoplexy at his home on Capitol Hill on April 24, 1863. An obituary noted that "he was remarkably punctual and assiduous in his duties, unobtrusive, moral, and domestic in his habits, and of sterling integrity as a man." He had been married twice, first in 1814 to Margaret Jones Monington, who died in 1826, shortly after the birth of their seventh child; and then to his wife's sister, Rachelle T. Monington, in October 1827. Rachel bore him two children. Only three of Meehan's children are known to have survived him.

Meek, Field Bradford, paleontologist, b. in Madison, Ind., 10 Dec, 1817; d. in Washington, D.C., 21 Dec., 1876. He received a public school education, and when a student became interested in the fossil remains that were found in the vicinity of his home. As he grew older he chose a mercantile career, but, failing in this, he directed his attention to geology, and became in 1848 an assistant in the U.S. geological survey of Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota, then under the direction of David D. Owen. During 1852-58 he assisted James Hall in the paleontological work of the state of New York except in the summers, when he was engaged in field-work. In 1853 he was associated with Ferdinand V. Hayden in making a collection of invertebrate and other fossils in the bad-lands of Dakota. He settled in Washington, D.C., in 1858, and thereafter devoted his time principally to investigating and reporting on the organic remains that had been accumulated by the government exploring expeditions. The invertebrate paleontology of the Rocky mountain region, as developed in the survey under Prof. Hayden, was entrusted to Mr. Meek. He also devoted much time to the paleontology of Illinois, Ohio, California, and of many of the territories. He was a member of many scientific societies, and in 1870 was elected to the National academy of sciences. His papers, which were numerous, appeared in the transactions of societies to which he belonged, in state and national geological reports, and in scientific journals. Mr. Meek published, through the Smithsonian institution, with Ferdinand V. Hayden, “Paleontology of the Upper Missouri” (1855); and alone “Check-List of the Invertebrate Fossils of North America,” cretaceous, jurassic, and miocene (1864); also a “Report on the Invertebrate, Cretaceous and Tertiary Fossils of the Upper Missour Country) (Washington, 1876).

Final Rites for C.H. Megill
Masonic Services Followed by Burial in Congessional Cemetery
Funeral services for Charles H. Megill, who died last Wednesday at Lee's chapel, Rev. E. Hez Swen officiated. Interment was at Congressional cemetery. Masonic rites were conducted by Hope Lodge, No. 20, of which the deceased was a member.

Charles H. Megill was a resident business man of Washington for the past eighteen years, and was well known in business and Masonic circles. The self-inflicted death of Mr. Megill was ascribed by his attending physician in a recent illness to mental derangement, resulting from cerebral hemorrhage. A short time previous to his death Mr. Megill left Emergency Hospital, where for two months he had been critically ill from a hemorrhage of the brain.

In a letter to the family the physician stated that "undoubtedly his disturbed mental condition was the cause of his act, and he was entirely irresponsible, as there was no apparent motive to prompt him to suicide."

Meredith, Mary E.: The Evening Star, February 14, 1903, p. 5

A noble woman, kind and true,
A Christian by the light she had
This thought was o'er impressing you.
She would that all on earth were glad.
As some rare jewel of the mine
She gave her light with that pure glow
Which stars emit where e'er they shine,
On field of spotless arctic snow.

Her deeds of charity were kept Unpublished to the world at large;
Her life exertions never slept
When she had duty to discharge.
The will of God she'd recognize
In Chance to bless when give her;
She saw the cross of Christ arise
When she assisted those who err.

Willing to help the erring when
Their hands in supplication rose;
She saw the angel form in men
When they the paths of virtue chose.
Her faith in God her trust in right,
Ne'er had a doubt to mar her life;
It was her soul's intense delight
To be a true, God-fearing wife.

She's dead! And yet such cannot die;
The character will e'er remain;
On Mollie's God we must rely
To reunite us all again.
May holy peace and ceaseless rest
Enwrap her soul. And comfort give 'Till God shall say come forth, ye blessed,
And be where Christ and Mollie live.
Carlton Hughes.

E.H. Swem, pastor of the Second Baptist Church of this city, of which Mrs. Meredith was a member, officiated at the ceremonies. Interment was made in Congressional cemetery.

On Monday, March 19th, 1883, at 1:30 o'clock a.m., Richard Ledoux, son of Annie E. and the late James M. Merideth, of Richmond, Va.

In the death of Ledoux we feel that the bereaved mother and little ones have indeed lost more than son and brother. Having known him for many years, we can speak of his truly noble qualities--large-hearted and generous to a fault, always having a kind word for the dear ones at home, who have looked to him for comfort in many trials, and who must now bid farewell to him on earth forever. To his mother he was ever watchful of her interest and comfort, and to the little ones both father and brother.

Aged Resident's Funeral
Last Rites Over Remains of Miss Rebecca C. Merilion
The funeral of Miss Rebecca C. Merilion, who died Saturday morning, took place yesterday afternoon at the Western Presbyterian Church, of which church she had long been a devoted member. The Rev. Dr. Bailey, rector of the church, officiated. The choir sang a hymn which had been a favorite of the deceased, and the church bell tolled ninety-nine times, a stroke for each year of her life. Miss Merilion was born in England in 1808, but came to Washington in 1818. She had seen the city grow, and in one of her latest reminiscences referred to the days when Lafayette Park was a neglected graveyard. Miss Merilion visited England after she was sixty years old, and had traveled extensively over the Untied States. She was a woman of culture, and possessed a winning personality, which endeared her to many friends, both old and young.

Following the funeral services the remains were laid in the receiving chapel in the Congressional cemetery, to be interred later besides relatives whom she had long outlived.

Source Unknown
Rev. E. Clinton Merrick, A.M.

Rev. E.C. Merrick, was born in Lebanon, Ohio, April 8, 1824, and died in Washington, D.C., December 5, 1880. Prof. Merrick spent his early life in Xenia, Ohio, where he acquired the elements of an English education. From a French gentleman, to whom his father gave the hospitality of his home, he learned to speak and read French with great fluency.

In his 16th year he made a profession of religion and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he remained a useful and consistent member until his death.

He was educated at the Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, from which he graduated in 1845. The year after his graduation, he was appointed a tutor in the Ohio Wesleyan University, at Delaware, Ohio, which position he held for three years. While teaching here, there were among the students two brothers, who with their sister were living in the town. The Professors and tutors, in order to give the sister the advantages of the University agreed to give her private lessons, and it became the part of Prof. Merrick to teach her French. On the day of his funeral the President's carriage conveyed Mrs. Hayes to the now desolate home to lay on the casket a magnificent floral offering, and to pay her own personal tribute to her former tutor.

On the 30th of December, 1846, he was married to Miss Maria E. Wells, who with two daughters survive him. At the close of the 3d year of his services as tutor, he felt himself called to the ministry, and after receiving the endorsement of the church at Delaware, was admitted into the Ohio Conference in September 1849, and filled the following appointments: Miamisburg, Logan and Harmer. At the close of this year, he became the principal of the Coolville, (Ohio), Academy. After two years service here he was elected Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy in McKendree College, at Lebanon, Ill. The climate of this part of Illinois not agreeing with him, he was compelled by ill health to resign his position at the close of the year, and in 1855, he returned to Ohio and took charge of Mechanicsburg circuit in the Cincinnati Conference. After being three months in this work, at the request of Dr. (afterward Bishop) Thompson, President of the Wesleyan University, who very highly esteemed his scholarship and ability as a teacher, he was released from his ministerial work and re-appointed tutor, where he remained two years. Returning again to the work of the ministry he spent six years in the pastorate.

In 1863 the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, on making inquiry for reliable men to fill certain positions in his bureau he was directed to Prof. Merrick, as a man who could in every way be depended upon. He was immediately tendered an appointment, which he accepted and entered he government service. After a short time spent in this department, at the request of the Commissioner of the Land Office, he was transferred to the Interior Department and assigned a third class clerkship in the Land office. While in this office he was employed by the Commissioner of Agriculture to edit the Annual Report of his department, which work he performed after the work in his office was over. So valuable was he service rendered, that Commissioner Capron requested his transfer to the Agricultural Department where he received a fourth class clerkship. In this department he rendered most efficient service in preparing much of the material for the monthly and Annual Reports. For several years he was connected with the Chronicle, in this city, which was under the management of J.W. Forney, Esq., his contributions being chiefly scientific. In the early part of this year (1880), he entered into the joint Editorship of the Washington World, and contributed largely to its columns. On coming to this city in 1863, he united with Wesley Chapel, the most prominent Methodist church at that time in this place. On the death of Rev. Mr. Sipes, who was in charge of he Fourth street M.E. Church, the Rev. G.V. Leech, the pastor of Waugh church, was transferred to 4th street. Waugh church was supplied in turn by the local preaching of this city. Prof. Merrick in his turn conducted the service, which made such an impression that he was requested to become the regular supply until the next session of the Annual Conference. He obtained a transfer of membership and took charge of Waugh Church, doing the whole work of pastor and preacher in addition to the regular duties of his desk in the public service. Under his care the church enjoyed great prosperity, and his ministrations are often now after seventeen years, spoken of by hose who enjoyed them.

Prof. Merrick was an excellent scholar. He found time amid the busy life he led to read very extensively in philosophy and literature, in English and French. He kept abreast with the times in the current topics under discussion by such men as Darwin, Huxley and Joseph Cook; and has left, in manuscript, a decidedly able and independent work on the Immortality of the Soul. He was a clear thinker and a vigorous writer. No man could have performed the amount of work in and out of office which he accomplished, except by the most indefatigable labor. He was never idle, and yet he never seemed busy; he always had time for an hour's relaxation in social intercourse. A good talker, with a large fund of information, a more companionable associate one could not desire. He was modest to a fault. There was nothing assumed in his manners. He was as sincere as he was modest, a perfect gentleman and a true friend. He was genuinely religious.

The spirit of Christ was clearly illustrated by him. Believing in the doctrines of the New Testament, he gave himself up to them or be transformed into the image of the real character he saw there delineated. His steady but unpretentious piety has left a deep impression on the church he has so long been associated with. His influence grew until at his death it was stronger for God and humanity than at any previous time. Many regret his departure as a personal loss. His obituary may be thus written: A useful life, a peaceful death, a blessed immortality.

In the death of Mrs. Maria Elizabeth Merrick, Washington has lost one of its most venerable residents. Born in Cincinnati, August 23, 1828, of pioneer parents who had gone down the Ohio River on a raft. Maria E. Wells received her education partly at the college own of Oxford, where she met and married Edward C. Merrick, who became a teacher at the Delaware Wesleyan and afterward a member of the Cincinnati conference of the M.E. Church. In the early years of the civil war, he accepted a position in the internal revenue bureau and with his family came here in 1863. They became members of Waugh M.E. Church, for which for a few months Mr. Merrick supplied the pulpit. After 34 years of married life her husband died and for 34 years since his death Mrs. Merrick has been a member of the Capitol Hill W.C.T.U. She also was a charter member of the board of managers of the Methodist Home for the Aged; a life manager of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Baltimore branch, and a successful Sabbath school teacher. Two of her children, Mrs. Robert A. Church, of Woodmont, Va., and Mrs. Susie K. Graham of Portland, Oreg., survive her.

The Evening Star, November 6, 1905
Held for Grand Jury
Edward Lacy Before a Coroner’s Inquest
Responsible for the Death of Frank A. Merrill in August Last

Edward Lacey, seventeen years old, who shot and fatally injured Frank Alvin Merrill the 23d day of August last, as heretofore printed in The Star, was held for the action of the grand jury at an inquest at the morgue this morning. Lacey, who was rearrested Friday night when it was thought Merrill was dying, was at the inquest this morning with counsel, Attorney Albert Sillers. His father was also present at the hearing. Edward Maxwell, who was with Lacey the night the shooting occurred, was an important witness in the case. He explained to the jury how Merrill had tried to start a fight when he met the witness, Lacey and two young ladies at a dance given at Beucheler’s garden, on the Bladensburg road. He also told the coroner and jury of how the police prevented a fight and of how Lacey tried to get so far away from Merrill that the latter could not assault him. Maxwell told of a second meeting at a Chinese restaurant on 9th street and of the part a policeman took in the affair there. Merrill, he stated, was started toward his home by a policeman, but instead of going home he hurried around the corner, overtook them at 9th and D streets and renewed the fight that resulted in his death. Deputy Coroner Glazebrook explained that death was caused by an injury to the brain, a small piece of the skull having penetrated the brain matter. Dr. White, the resident physician at the Emergency Hospital, told of the wounded man being under treatment at the hospital three times. The last time he was there he died. His condition indicated that he was suffering from depression.

Elmer Houch, 614 15th street northeast, testified hat he had known Merrill since March last, but did not know Lacey prior to the night the trouble occurred. While at the park on the Bladensburg road, he stated, Merrill tried to start a fight with Lacey and his companion. Merrill was ordered out of the place by a policeman, and it was as much as witness could do to get him out. Merrill told witness that he (Merrill) was looking for trouble, and that if he met the men outside he would give them all that was coming to them. Witness said they came to the city on a wagon and got something to drink.

“Do you know Rose Davis?” the coroner asked witness.

“Yes, sir,” he answered, “I know her from meeting her at the dancing school.”

“And do you know Edith Yost?”

Met at Chinese Restaurant
Witness explained that the party met at a Chinese restaurant on 9th street, where they had words, and Merrill struck Rose Davis. A policeman prevented further trouble there and ordered the party to disperse. Merrill said to witness: “I’m going to get that fellow, and if you are a friend of mine you’ll stick to me.”

Merrill then ran around 8th street and headed off Lacey, Maxwell and the two girls at 9th and D streets. He said to Maxwell: “You are with my girl,” and struck him. Then he went after Lacey and the latter shot him. Houck told the jury that the police arrested Maxwell, and when witness told him he had the wrong man the policeman struck him at his club, and told him he wanted no “butting in.”

Edith Yost, living at No. 10 Minnesota avenue, told of her visit to the dance at Beucheler’s Garden and of the trouble Merrill had there. He spoke to Rose Davis about a picture, she said, and when trouble started the police sent them out. Witness told of what happened from then until the time they reached the Chinese restaurant. There Merrill renewed the trouble and the police again took a hand in it. She related the story of the meeting at 9th and D streets. While in front of the Chinese restaurant, she stated, Lacey exhibited a revolver and said he thought that would prevent trouble. Witness left the party at Pennsylvania avenue and 9th street and had started home when she heard the reports of two pistol shots.

Rose Davis, 316 Lincoln street, Anacostia, gave similar testimony.

“Merrill didn’t go with me,” she stated, in response to a question asked by the coroner, “but I knew him a long time ago when he lived near the cemetery on 13th street.
Witness said she and her companion, Edith Yost, had become acquainted with Lacey and Maxwell on Pennsylvania avenue the night before the shooting occurred. She was surprised when they appeared at the dance the next night. Merrill was at the dance and had a girl with him. Trouble started in the park because Merrill wanted to fight Lacey and Maxwell.

“Was he jealous?” she was asked.

“No sir.”

“What was the trouble?”

“It was just his disposition.”

Miss Davis told of the conduct of Merrill the several times he came up and tried to cause trouble, and said that Merrill showed the revolver in front of the Chinese restaurant. He said he thought that might prevent trouble. She said she had left the party when the last row started and did not see the shooting, but heard the reports of the weapon. This closed the testimony and the case was submitted. Merrill’s body was removed to the home of his parents, 509 6th street northwest, from where the funeral will take place tomorrow morning.

The Evening Star, December 6, 1882
The Killing of Wm. Messer
The Coroner's Inquest Today

The Coroner's Inquest
The inquest was held at the first precinct station at 11 o'clock today by Dr. D.W.C. Patterson, the coroner, the following being the jurors: W.A. Barnes, J. Harrison Johnson, C.H. Parker, John H. Wise, G.W. Smithson and Henry Steinbach. The first witness was Charles Frere. Mr. E.D. Wright, as counsel, stated he had been requested by the family to be present, and asked if there was any objection to his presence. He was told that there was not.

Mr. Frere testified that he was a brakeman, and as he was coming down on the car about fifteen minutes past 7 o'clock, he saw the deceased about ten or fifteen feet from him, as he judged, on the track; called to him "get off the track." or something to the same effect, at the same time putting on his brake. Deceased paid no attention to him, and continued to walk in the middle of the track till the car struck him, walking right up to it. This was just at the entrance to the yard. Two young ladies, and he thought a young man passed over the track, ahead of him some distance; was not certain whether the engine had hold of the cars at the time or not; it had had hold of two baggage cars.

By Jurors--There is no watchman at this point, it not being a street crossing. Witness could not have pushed him away, and did all he could to stop the car by the brakes. Witness did not know that the cars were detached from the engine or not. The man was struck right in the breast, and was inside of the curb line at the time. Don't know that there ever was a watchman at this point. It might be advisable to have a watchman there for some reasons and not for others.

Mr. Wright asked if it was not impossible for a man to walk three feet in the middle of the track from the center of where the pavement should be.

At this point the jurors expressed a desire to personally inspect the place, including the tracks.

On returning Charles Strobel, a switchman, testified to seeing deceased about the same time Frere did, and Charles Kline, an expressman, to seeing the accident, and that, deceased seemed to be oblivious to any danger.

 The Verdict
The jury found a verdict that Messer came to his death about 7 o'clock p.m. on the 5th instant, near the crossing on 6th street and Baltimore and Potomac depot, on the sidewalk, by being run over by a baggage car coming in the depot attached to the switching engine. The jury believe, from evidence adduced, that the company was negligent in not having a flag-man at the crossing. If the company had exercised due precaution the accident would not have happened.

The deceased was a blacksmith by trade, but of late years had been engaged in the wholesale grocery business as a drummer. He leaves a widow and one child.

<td>Mr. Middleton was born in Maryland in 1806 and came to Washington about 1828. A few years later he formed a partnership in the grocery business with Benjamin Beall, which was continued for nearly thirty years. He continued to have his home as above for thirteen years and his death occurred in this city in 1863. Two sons and two daughters are the only children out of a large family who are living. The sons, also one of the daughters, are still residents of this city, and to Mr. Alpheus Middleton, the older son, I am very much indebted for information he has given me. Mr. Middleton is still active in the same business as that his father followed though not numbered with the younger citizens, the firm of Browning &amp; Middleton being well known in the business community.</td>

Mr. Milans was fifty-four years of age. He had been in poor health for the last three years, having never fully recovered from a severe attack of the grip. His condition gradually grew worse until a short time ago, when he suffered an attack of paralysis, which hastened the end.

The deceased was one of the oldest and best known printers of the city, having for many years been engaged in business at 615 E street northwest.

He was born in Bloomfield, Pa., January 26, 1852 and came to Washington when he was thirteen years of age. A short time after he came to this city he obtained employment with the printing firm of W.H. and O.H. Morrison, law book publishers.

From the position of errand boy Mr. Milans worked his way up in the establishment until he became chief clerk. A short time thereafter he went into business for himself, being first located on 7th street between F and G streets, and later between E and F streets. Finally in 1876 he moved into the building at 615 E street northwest, where he continued in business until three years ago, when his illness caused him to give up an active business life.

Mr. Milans' wife died about six months ago. Six sons -- Messrs. Robert, McPherson, Joseph H., Calvin T., Henry G. and William B. Milans -- survive him. The interment was in Congressional cemetery.

Milans, Joseph D. d. 22 Jan 1916

Born October 31, 1877, at Landisburg, Perry Co., Pa., and has resided in Washington, D.C. practically all his life. He was educated in the public schools and Columbian (now George Washington) and National Universities of this city; received degrees of Bachelor of Laws, 1899; Master of Patent Law, 1900, at Columbian University, and Master of Laws, 1900., at National University; was first admitted to the practice of law before the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia September 19, 1899, and has since become a member of the bar of many of the Federal courts including the Supreme Court of the United States; has for more than sixteen years devoted his practice to the specialty of patent law, being a member of the Patent Law Association of Washington.

He is a member of the legal Greek letter fraternity of Phi Delta Phi; is Secretary of the Dime Savings Bank, and a Director of the East Washington Savings Bank, this city.

He was initiated in St. John's Lodge, No. 11, July 27, 1900; passed August 24, 1900; raised September 28, 1900, and served as Master in 1904. He is also an honorary member of Temple Lodge, No. 32.

Received the Mark master’s degree in Washington Naval Chapter, No. 6, March 3, 1903; Past Master’s degree March 17, 1903; M.E. Master’s degree, March 17, 1903; Royal Arch degree, April 21, 1903, and at the present time is serving as Scribe; is a member of Adoniram Council, No. 2, R. & S.M. Orient Commandery, No. 5, K.T., conferred the Order of the Temple upon him June 15, 1903, and elected him Commander in 1909.

He is a member of Martha Chapter, No. 4, O.E.S., and served as Patron in the year 1906.

He is a member of the Royal Order of Scotland, and has for several years been a member of the following Scottish Rite bodies: Mithras Lodge of Perfection, No. 1; Evangelist Chapter, R.C., No. 1; Robert de Bruce Council, K.K., No. 1, and Albert Pike Consistory, M.R.S., No. 1.

He was elected Junior Grand Steward in 1908, and has been advanced to and is now serving as Grand Pursuivant.

Having already attained an enviable position in the professional and business world, his unusual ability is proven, and this in connection with his record as a capable and painstaking officer in the several Masonic bodies, gives assurance of a satisfactory and brilliant administration of the office of Grand Master, to which, in the natural course of events, he may attain at an age which would rank him with the little coterie of men who have realized that ambition while comparatively young.

Dr. Woodward's Statement
The statement is as follows:

"Mr. Archie S. Miller, a civil engineer, employed by the Nicaraguan canal commission, died at the Hotel Johnson yesterday of yellow fever.

"Mr. Miller has been in Nicaragua since April last. He left there about two weeks ago on a steamer bound for New York, but which stopped at Port Limond, Costa Rica, an infected point, to take on a cargo of fruit. He arrived in New York on Monday last.

"His whereabouts from the time of his arrival in New York until the time of his registration at the hotel Wednesday morning are not known. After registering he went out, and was brought back to the hotel unconscious about 5 o'clock p.m. by some unknown part, who assisted him to his bed, and left without giving any naming as to the man's condition.

"The case was believed to be an 'ordinary drunk,' which the patient would sleep off. He was not, therefore, disturbed Thursday to clean his room, the chambermaid finding him in bed, apparently asleep, at the time of her several visits.

"About 3 o'clock yesterday morning an inmate of one of the neighboring rooms was disturbed by a noise from the apartment occupied by Mr. Miller, and notified the hotel authorities, who at once summoned a physician. The probable nature of the case was promptly suspected and steps taken to properly isolate it. The health department was notified and secured the services of experts from the United States marine hospital service. The unconsciousness of the patient rendered it impossible to secure any history of the case from him, and a definite diagnosis was, therefore, impossible. The patient died at 2 o'clock p.m. The body was wrapped in cloths saturated with antiseptic solution and removed to the morgue.

"As it was necessary, however, to perform the autopsy by daylight it had to be postponed until this morning. Experts from the marine hospital service, who had seen many such autopsies and who were familiar with the post-mortem features of the disease, were present, so that the case might not by any chance be left in doubt. The autopsy findings were, however, so clear that there can be no possible question of the nature of the disease.

Apartments Disinfected
"The apartments at the hotel were disinfected yesterday afternoon with chlorine and subsequently with formaldehyde gas, both being most powerful disinfecting agents.

"The room and its contents have been, since that time, scrubbed with solution of corrosive sublimate, except the bedding, which has been burned. His baggage has never been removed from the railroad station, and will be taken in charge by the health department.

"There is no reason to anticipate danger from the premises, and no likelihood of the spread of the disease in this city at the present period in the year, as the temperature is below that at which it develops.

"The body was wrapped in an antiseptic sheet, placed in a coffin filled with quicklime, and will be buried this afternoon.

"After Mr. Miller's death a letter reached the hotel addressed to him, and was opened by his most intimate friend. It was from a companion who had been with him on the way from Nicaragua, and showed that Miller had been quite ill while on the steamer, and that the writer of the letter, at present in Pittston, Pa., was at the time of writing--the 17th instant--himself suffering from symptoms which, to a well-informed physician, would appear suspicious.

"The United States marine hospital service will look after the case in Pittston."

A Genuine Case
When The Star reporter reached the sixth precinct station, on New Jersey avenue, where the morgue is located, 1 o'clock this afternoon, Coroner Carr was about to drive away in his carriage.

"It is a genuine case of yellow fever," said the coroner. "I am not at liberty now to say any thing more about it than that the health officer will inform the press of the circumstances. No one need be alarmed."
With this the coroner drove away. Standing on the station steps were Sergeant Falvey, several officers and two gentlemen in civilian clothes. Upon inquiring about the case the sergeant informed the reporter that one of the two civilians had been with Miller in Nicaragua and knew all the faces. Just then a policeman came outside the station and warned the civilians to say nothing with regard to the matter.

Therefore, they refused to talk, and in a minute hastened away, taking a Metropolitan car uptown. A health office employee armed with a brass and glass disinfecting machine, came from the morgue and stated that Dr. Woodward could be seen there. Entering the passageway at the side of the station, a walk of fifty feet brought the reporter to the morgue. Glancing through the open doorway, a body wrapped in white cloth could be seen lying on one of the tables.

Dr. Woodward, accompanied by another gentleman, came to the doorway and talked briefly to The Star man.

"Yes, the autopsy has just been held," said he, "and the nature of the case as yellow fever fully determined. Every precaution has been taken, and the body packed in lime, will be disposed of this afternoon. There is no fear of a spread."

Mr. Johnson's Statement
Proprietor E.L. Johnson, of Hotel Johnson, was seen this afternoon by a Star reporter, and made the following statement of his knowledge of the case:

"Mr. Miller is an old friend of the house and has stopped with me upon at least a dozen occasions. Before he went to Nicaragua he spent ten days with me and he had come here this time upon an order from the department bringing him home. He came to the hotel about 7 o'clock Wednesday evening, and, stating that he was not well, was shown at once to his room.

"No further attention was paid to him until the following morning about 7 o'clock, when the chambermaid went to the room, and, opening the door, saw him lying in bed, with his face next to the wall. Thinking him asleep, and not desiring to disturb him, she left. Returning at 10 o'clock, she found him still in bed, and again went away. A third time, at 1:30 o'clock, she went to the room, but upon reaching the door, and hearing talk going on inside, believing him to be with friends, she again refrained from her efforts to change the room.

"Nothing more was heard from Mr. Miller and no further calls were paid to his room. Along toward morning Mr. Houchens, a mail contractor who occupies a room adjoining, called the bellboy and told him he had heard groans coming from Mr. Miller's room. The bellboy reported it to Night Clerk Coleman, who at once went to the room, and opening the door, found Miller unconscious, but groaning.

"He at once called Dr. Hooe, formerly of the Emergency Hospital, having an office now on 13th street below F street, and after the doctor had made an examination he called Dr. W.W. Johnson in consultation. The sick man was then in a state of collapse, and their first diagnosis was that the case was one of pernicious malarial fever.

An Expert Called
"At 10:30 o'clock Dr. Johnson thought it best to also call in consultation Dr. F.V. Brooks of No. 465 Florida avenue, a son of James A. Brooks, at one time chief of the secret service. Dr. Brooks is an expert in yellow fever cases, and, although he did not so express himself, he had concluded upon examination that it was very probably yellow fever.

"He made the customary tests and at the same time the health office was notified, and a little later the Marine Hospital authorities were informed of the suspicious character of the case. The physicians ordered the room under quarantine and Dr. Hooe locked himself in it, in order to prevent the possibility of any one entering. Upon the arrival of the authorities the matter was placed in their hands and every precaution was taken by them to prevent the spread of any infection.

"The room was disinfected, the body wrapped in antiseptic cloths, and the contents of the room were taken out and burned by the health authorities, so that, so far as I am concerned, I have done everything that can be done to protect my guests and the public.

"The father of Mr. Miller, who lives at Danville, Va., was telegraphed for and arrived last evening.

"Mr. Hankins, who is also connected as an engineer with the Nicaraguan commission, called at the hotel and rendered every assistance in his power. He was an old friend and associate of the deceased."

An official at the marine hospital stated to The Star this afternoon that the case is entirely in the hands of the local health authorities.
"There need be no fear," said he. "It is so cold now that the fever could not spread. Every safeguard, however, has been employed."

The Miller Case

_Conflicting Opinions Respecting Character of Fatal Disease_
_Dr. Doty of the Same Opinion Still_ _Review by the Chief Surgeon of the Marine Hospital_
_Cause of Yellow Fever_

Before Mr. Doty, the quarantine officer of New York, returned to the metropolis this morning he had something more to say to the marine hospital service in continuation of the controversy over the Miller yellow fever case. He remains unconvinced that the case was what it was diagnosed and autopsied to be, and answered in a general way the scientific exposition of the opposite side of the dispute in _The Star_ yesterday. Going beyond the original point of attack, he enters upon new issues with the marine hospital service.

_The Opposite View_

The attention of Dr. Prestion H. Bailhache, surgeon-in-charge at the marine hospital, was called to Dr. Doty's statements this afternoon.

"It is useless for him to attempt controversial argument. I will not help him in it," said he. "There is nothing to be said beyond what was contained in _The Star_’s very accurate and technical description of the case yesterday. I will add, however, that not any of the physicians taking part in the autopsy or who saw the case dissents from the yellow fever diagnosis. There is no chance to dispute it—all the evidences and symptoms were apparent."

"Dr. Doty was notified November 4 that the Allegheny had touched at an infected port, and there our responsibility ended."

"But," said the reporter, "Dr. Doty insists that the vessel passed quarantine all right."

"Ah," replied the doctor, "there is the point. Was she all right? Miller had been sick and got up to pass the officers."

"Dr. Doty says your office was negligent in failing to inform him of the Miller case until Sunday last, two days after the death."

"We notified him early as we could," replied Dr. Bailhache. "He ought to have been watchful after the 4th instant, and caught Miller and Herbert at New York. No, I'll not say why he was not informed on Friday or Saturday. We won't keep up the controversy. We are wholly satisfied with our work in the matter. Miller had yellow fever."

With regard to Dr. Doty's statement that the germ of yellow fever had not been found, Dr. Bailhache handed the reporter the "Public Health Report," issued by the Treasury Department November 11. In contained the preliminary reports of Surgeon Wasdin and Passed Assistant Surgeon H.D. Geddings of the marine hospital service, who were detailed in 1897 by the President to investigate in Havana, Cuba, the cause of yellow fever.

_INTERRUPTED BY WAR_

Suitable rooms were provided in Havana and a laboratory established, and the work was continued until interrupted by the war. These officers have been directed to return to Havana and continue their investigation, the laboratory having been undisturbed during the war.

Dr. Geddings reports that in sixteen cultures the Sanarelli organism was found to the extent of 76.93 per cent. He concludes by indicating that that the bacillus interoides of Sanarelli is the specific agent in the causation of yellow fever.

Death From Yellow Fever District Health Officer Mentions Miller Case in Weekly Report

The death which occurred from yellow fever on the 18th instant was the first ever recorded from that cause in the District of Columbia. The deceased was a civil engineer who had arrived at New York on the steamer Allegheny on the 16th instant from Greytown, Nicaragua, via Port Limon, Costa Rica. The probable source of the infection was Port Limon, at which the steamer touched on the 7th instant. The deceased was, according to the statement of a fellow passenger, taken sick during the voyage, but at the time of his arrival at

New York, on the 9th day, was able to pass the quarantine officers and come to this city, where he arrived during the afternoon. He registered at a hotel about 7 o'clock, as nearly as can be learned, went immediately to his room, and apparently became unconscious shortly afterward; this was on the 9th or 10th day after leaving Port Limon, and if the disease developed after the ordinary period of incubation of four or five days, was the 5th or 6th day of his illness. Nothing more is known of him until about 3 o'clock the morning of the 18th instant, when the occupant of the adjoining room was aroused by noises in the apartment occupied by the deceased. A physician was immediately called, and from the fact that the patient had been in a country known to be infected with yellow fever, and because of the serious nature of the disease and the presence at that time of characteristic black vomit, suspected the infectious character of the malady and took proper steps to have it definitely diagnosed. Specimens of urine showed the presence of albumen and no casts, and an examination of the blood failed to reveal any evidences of malarial infection. The patient died about 2 o'clock without having recovered consciousness. An autopsy performed the next day revealed the characteristic lesions of yellow fever and no evidence of disease of any other variety. There is, therefore, no question as to the correctness of the diagnosis. It is not, however, probable, and, in fact, is scarcely possible, that there should be any spread of this disease in this District at the present season of the year.

Case of Suicide
No Inquest Necessary Over Ellen Miller's Body
She Came to Her Birthplace in Order to Die--
Had Friends in Baltimore
Coroner Hammett today viewed the remains of Ellen Miller, the young girl whose body was found in the Eastern branch Thursday night, and, after talking with the witnesses assembled at Lee's undertaking establishment, he decided that an inquest would be unnecessary, and he issued a certificate of death by drowning, and declared that it was a clear case of suicide.

In consequence of this decision the witnesses were discharged and preparations were made for the burial of the body. Miss Miller's relatives, who live in Baltimore, reached the city this morning and were at the undertaker's at 11 o'clock, the hour set for the inquest. They positively identified the body, and when the coroner tendered his decision they made arrangements at once to have it placed this afternoon in the vault at Mount Olivet cemetery, where the girl's mother is buried.

It is a clear case of self-destruction, said the coroner to a Star reporter. I have talked with all of these people, and there is not a scrap of evidence that gives the shadow of a suspicion of foul play. I have only to do with the manner of the girl's death, and there is so little question that it was a case of suicide by drowning that I shall not go to the expense and trouble of an inquest. I have nothing to do with the poor girl's past life or with the causes leading up to her unhappy and fatal act. That is none of my business, and I shall not attempt to unravel the mystery, if there be one, that surrounds her motives.

Certain Identification
The identification of the body was complete and unquestionable. After the coroner had announced his decision all the witnesses filed past the coffin in the chapel back of the office, and those who knew the girl in life agreed that the poor, wasted form of the suicide was that of Ellen Miller. Mr. W.H. Russell of Baltimore is uncle to the dead girl. He and his wife were present this morning to take charge of the remains. Mr. Russell said to The Star reporter that the statements made this morning that the girl had no home or place of shelter were untrue.

She Was Welcome
She had a home, and a good and welcome one, under my roof, he said, and she knew it. She visited my family about three weeks ago, shortly after her employers left the city, and spent about a week with us. She went with my daughters, and seemed to be very cheerful and happy. When she prepared to return to Washington I urged her to stay with us during the summer or until she could get other employment. I told her she was welcome to stay until Col. Graham's family came back in the fall. She said she was sure to be reappointed to her old place, and was quite pleased with the prospect of living with Mrs. Graham again. She was paid $10 a month and was given her board, and she thought that was a good wage.

But for some reason she refused to remain, and came back here, and a few days later one of my daughters received a letter from her which was bright and cheerful. There was not a hint of suicide in it nor a word of any trouble, mental or otherwise. Yesterday evening my daughter received another letter from Ellen, saying that she had decided to commit suicide and that by the time of its receipt she would be dead.

There was no word in this second letter to indicate why she had reached this conclusion, or any inkling of her motive. I am at a loss to understand why she should take her life. She had several places to go to, in addition to mine, for there are friends and relatives all over Baltimore who would have been glad to give her shelter. I have not had a suspicion that she was in want or in need of help, or I should have sent her money or come here after her.

Ellen’s mother died about a year ago, and since then the poor girl has been very much downcast at times, and I fear she has brooded until she sought relief in death. She was born on a farm out here near what I believe they call Uniontown (Anacostia), and was always quiet and retiring. She read a great many books, and was eager for information. I have a notion that of late she has been reading more than was good for her, and has got her head filled with melancholy and romantic notions, that have crowded on her until she thought of suicide. I do not know anything about her love affairs, and did not know until I read this morning, that she had a lover. She did not mention a thing to my daughters, with whom she was very intimate. I think she died a good, pure girl.

Knew the River

So it turns out that the girl sought death near the scene of her birth, and the theory of the river men, who declared that the suicide knew the nature of the river, appears to have been well founded. Facts have come to light to show that the girl was in considerable distress for money during the last few days, and that during the early part of the week she was forced to seek aid from the police station, whence she was turned over to the matron of an employment agency. But it seems that she was then bent on destroying her life, for she did not return, as she promised, and Thursday night she made her way to the river and plunged in. She was owner of some property, inherited from her mother, but it was unimproved, except one lot on the Bladensburg road, which rendered a return only large enough to pay the interest on a small deed of trust. Recently the girl went to Mr. John Larner, who, as counsel of the Washington Loan and Trust Company, was trustee of the estate, and tried to effect some disposition of the property that would yield her a fund that she might use to give her a better education. But Mr. Larner showed her that there was little prospect of realizing at once on the property. The gross value of the land is probably about $5,000 with one or two trust deeds. When Mr. Larner told her these facts and showed her that she could not easily enter Wellesley College, which she desired to do, she was grievously disappointed. This was two weeks ago, and probably immediately after her return from her uncle’s house in Baltimore, and it is likely that it was this disappointment that first started the chain of melancholy thoughts that finally led to her self-destruction. It is stated that Miss Miller was engaged to be married to a young man named Johnson, who keeps a cigar store in this city. She wrote a number of letters just before she went to the river, telling those in whom she was most interested that she was about to die.

George O. Miller, who was a member of the local detective corps before the reorganization of the police department, died at the Casualty Hospital last night from an attack of apoplexy. Yesterday morning he was in perfect health when he left his home, 62 C street northwest, and walked across to the Baltimore and Ohio depot to see the excursionists gathered there. From the railroad station he went to the dining room at New Jersey avenue and D streets. Shortly after entering the room he was stricken and removed to the hospital.

The deceased was a native of Baltimore, where he was born the 4th of November, 1837. He came to this city when he was a boy, and learned his trade under the late Mayor Matthew S. Emery, becoming a stonecutter. In December, 1862, he was appointed to a position on the police force, being promoted to the detective office in November, 1866. He remained in office until November 20, 1882, when he was removed. About that time an investigation of the conduct of several members of the detective force was made by the grand jury, and Miller was one of several detectives to be indicted. His trial, as well as that of the other detectives, resulted in a vindication.

Mr. Miller was well known throughout the country because of the interest he took in republican politics. During his early life he attended and was an active worker at all the republican presidential conventions, and he was an active worker at all the republican presidential conventions, and he was an active ward politician in the city when the people enjoyed the right of franchise. He was a close friend and ardent admirer of Robert G. Ingersoll, and numbered Gen. Grant among his friends. Mr. Miller was a man who was exceptionally well informed, and even those who opposed him were willing to admit that he possessed rare detective ability. Three sons and a daughter survive him. Undertaker Sergeon removed the body from the hospital to the home of Mrs. Loving, daughter of the deceased, 437 10th street northeast, from where the funeral will take place Wednesday afternoon. The interment will be in Congressional cemetery.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll's Remarks at a Child's Funeral

At the funeral of Harry, the little son of Detective George O. Miller, yesterday afternoon, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll spoke at the grave. There was no service at the house. The casket was taken to Congressional cemetery, where Col. Ingersoll joined the funeral party. Just before the casket was lowered into the grave, Col. Ingersoll, at the request of Mr. Miller, made a brief address, in the course of which he said--"Why should we fear that which will come to all that is? We cannot tell, we do not know, which is the greater blessing--life or death. We cannot say that death is not a good. We do not know whether the grave is the end of this life, or the door to another, or whether the night here is not somewhere else a dawn."

The Arsenal Arrest

Yesterday, Mr. Isaac Miller, one of the persons arrested at the Arsenal, was released from jail. Mr. M. is an old resident of the city, and for many years has been in the employ of the Government. His son, Dr. A.W. Miller, is said to be one of the officials in the army of the “Southern Conthedveracy” as Artemus Ward calls it, while a more sensible son is on the other side. The investigating committee did not design that the military arrest should be made, though it was certainly made upon the testimony they were in possession of. It is claimed by Mr. Miller’s friends that he is a loyal citizen, and as such he subscribed readily to the oath of allegiance.

The Evening Star, July 31, 1861

Arrest of Mr. Isaac S. Miller

Editor of the Evening Star: I ask a sufficient space in your columns that I may render some service to an injured man. In your local notice of “the discoveries made by the Select Committee of the House of Representatives, investigating the condition of the various Departments,” you say there was “ample testimony of the sympathy of certain employees at the United States Arsenal with the rebellious States, and of their hostility to the United States Government,” and that Isaac Miller and eight others of those employees were arrested and committed to jail by Justice Donn.

Yes, sir, here in the capital of this free Government, in the middle of the nineteenth century, an aged citizen, who for nearly forty years has served the Federal Government with the utmost fidelity, who has spent that period of a long, useful and Christian life at the post assigned him in that Arsenal with an unceasing and faithful devotion to his duties that has obtained for him the highest encomiums from those under whom he has served, was suddenly seized, marched like a felon to the common jail, and there incarcerated as though he was a thief or a burglar.

He was not permitted to know the accusations against him, nor who had preferred them; but in the quiet performance of his public duties, he was petrified with astonishment at the announcement that he was a prisoner, and that without bail or main prize, he must like thief or a vagrant enter behind the prison gates. Suddenly torn from a tender and devoted family—ignominiously stripped of the domestic associations and the united domestic worship of a family altar, at which he had nightly communed with his Maker for almost a generation, he, at an age exceeding the scriptural limit of three score years and ten, was compelled for once to address that Being from the damp dungeon of criminals. And how was this wicked and cruel persecution brought about? He is paragraphed in the city papers as though he were a mere vagabond, under the significant caption, “In Jail”—and the public who have been thus informed of that arrest, shall also be informed of his release, and of the outrage that has been committed upon as loyal a citizen, as true a patriot, and as pure a Christian as has ever adorned the community and the church.

It has resulted wholly through the black plague of American politics—office-seeking—place hunting. Application had been made for his removal from the position which he has so worthily and so profitably to the Government, filled through all the changes and vicissitudes of party and political fortune. The application failed because of his value to the Government. But the savage ferocity of political lust knew no limits. The disappointed applicants availed themselves of the necessary secrecy of the inner chamber of a Congressional inquest, and there, by means of that gigantic iniquity, false swearing, gave him the cowardly and dastardly stab which the highwayman deals to his unsuspecting victim. They swore that he had justified the assault upon the U.S. troops to the city of Baltimore on the 19th of April—that he had asserted that the aggressions upon the South had been such that they were driven to take up arms against the Government—and that he had rejoiced at the disaster at Bull Run, and wished for a like result to all future engagements.

Not one of the creatures who swore to this dare to meet their victim face to face and repeat their perjury. He has not only not used the language ascribed, but has never uttered a sentiment from which any such inference can be drawn. Throughout the whole contest, his loyalty to the Government has been as firm and unshaken as that of the President himself or the General-in-Chief of the army. Like the true Christian patriot which he has always been, he has adhered with unswerving fidelity to that Government to which he has been so valuable.

His honored pastor, the newly-elected Chaplain to the Senate, in company with other near and dear relatives and friends, promptly commenced the task of restoring this persecuted old gentleman to his home and family. It was at once ascertained from the committee that even the testimony taken, did not contain a single allegation which could lead to his arrest, and that the committee were surprised and confounded by the measures which had been resorted to. They promptly informed the justice of this fact, and stated that the only question that could arise out of that evidence was whether the accused persons should be kept in the employ of the Government.

After much effort the case was investigated by the military authorities and through Gen. Mansfield the Justice was informed that they knew of no cause for the detention of any of the accused in custody; and directed him to act entirely under the directions of the House Committee. This committee, indignant at the bare imputation that they had caused the false arrest, promptly refused to give any directions in the case; but just as promptly informed the Justice that they had never for a moment conceived the idea that there was the slightest ground for arrest, or for any proceeding beyond a fair and impartial investigation as to whether the accused should be retained in the employ of the Government. Finding that Mr. Miller had been arrested, and was detained by a purely “false imprisonment,” he was, after something more than a day’s incarceration, released from the prison.

Thus has a man, who, by a life of undeviating integrity, of unostentatious modesty, and of sincere piety, richly earned for himself a character as spotless as the falling snow, been subjected to a cruel and inhuman persecution—to a degrading and humiliating indignity, that has brought sorrow and distress upon a heart stricken family, purely through an insatiate greediness for employment which the Government has found so faithfully attended in his hands.

As to the allegations made by means of this cowardly skulking behind the necessary secrets of the committee room, Mr. Miller defies his pursuers. He dares them to meet him in an investigation, where they will have to confront him. He denies them in the aggregate, and in detail. They have not the weak foundation of any hasty or incautious expressions, which even their wicked and greedy imaginations could torture into the slightest assemblance of what they have alleged.
Permit me to add, in conclusion, that this is written by one who has left the luxuries of home, to take the hazards of the war for the maintenance of the Federal Government, and whose loyalty has for its foundation a hearty, undeviating, and I may say, industrious support of the Republican organization from the hour of its birth—and an enthusiastic support of its policy for a period extending many years anterior.  I.M.T.

Hopes of His Recovery
Mr. J.C. Miller, of the Daily Critic, who fell from a window of his residence yesterday, as stated in The Star, is not fatally injured, his many friends will be glad to hear. His injuries consist of a fractured thigh, a dislocated shoulder, cut head and badly bruised body and some internal injuries. There are now good grounds for the belief that he will recover, and to this end it is desired that he shall be kept in quietude and that his sympathizing friends will refrain from calling for the present.

The Evening Star, August 30, 1880
Death of Mr. Miller
Mr. J.C. Miller, one of the proprietors and business manager of the Daily Critic, died at his residence on 10th street this afternoon at 2:40. The immediate cause of death was pneumonia, produced by the injuries received in the side by his fall from a third-story window last week. Mr. Miller commanded the respect of all who came in contact with him. He was a most excellent business man, and a true friend. His death will be regretted by the entire community.

The Evening Star, August 31, 1880
The Death of Mr. J.C. Miller
The sad announcement of the death of Mr. J.C. Miller was made in yesterday's Star. He was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in Lancaster in 1832; he was thus in his 48th year. He has since early life been actively in business, and has been distinguished by energy and industry. He was quick and nervy, pleasant and with a keen sense of the humorous. His father was much the same kind of man, as Pennsylvanians, those who knew him in the early railroad wars, recollect. Mr. J.C. Miller came to Washington at the invitation of John W. Forney in 1861 to assume the business management of the Daily Chronicle. He has often told the writer about his experiences. No books were kept when he took charge and no accounts of receipts made. He went to work and brought everything into accord with his accurate ideas of business. He used to stay at the office until after the paper was printed and then throw himself on a pile of paper and snatch a few hours sleep. He maintained management of the Daily Chronicle until 1868, when he started the Critic. He was in every way a sterling man and was always disposed to do acts of kindness and charity. His widow, a most estimable lady, was Miss Catherine Durham, of Baltimore. He also leaves a beautiful daughter about eight years old.

The employees of the Critic held a meeting this morning to take action in reference to the death of Mr. Miller. Mr. E.T. Peters, the editor of the paper, presided, and Mr. W.A. West was the secretary. Mr. A.J. Clarke offered a series of resolutions of condolence with the family, which were adopted, as also resolutions that they will attend the funeral in a body. The funeral will take place at two o'clock p.m. tomorrow and the interment will be made at the Congressional cemetery.

The Late J.C. Miller

Yesterday afternoon a meeting of members of the local press was held in the editorial rooms of the Republican to take action regarding the death of Mr. J.C. Miller, of the Daily Critic. Representatives of all the city papers were present, as follows:--H.H. de Witt, Post; Chas. T. Murray, Sunday Republic; Otto Reinecke, Washington Journal; John B. McCarthy, Sunday Gazette; J.H. Doyle, Sunday Herald; A.M. Clapp, H.P. Godwin and W.S. Lorner, National Republican; C.S. Noyes, James Croogon and Fletcher Hodges, of the The Star; E.T. Peters ad A.J. Clarke, Critic. The meeting was organized with Mr. A.M. Clapp in the chair and Mr. C.S. Noyes secretary.

On motion of Mr. McCarthy a committee was appointed on resolutions, and Messrs. McCarthy, Hodges and Peters were appointed. The reported the following:

We desire to place on records as a mark of our appreciation of the worth of Jacob Carpenter Miller the following: That he was known to us as an energetic journalist and business man--prompt, just and liberal in his dealings; a citizen whose efforts were directed to advancing the general interest of the community; a friend whose friendship was no idle sentiment; a husband whose true worth none but the afflicted wife can ever know, and a kind father, whose example is worthy of emulation. In fact, from our long association with him we have no hesitation in saying that he was a man in every sense of the word. The loss to his family, to his associates and to the community is irreparable, and none will miss him more than the many who have unknown to the world been aided by him. As the last mark of respect for our friend we will attend his funeral in a body.

Appropriate remarks were made by Messrs. Clapp, McCarthy, Noyes, Peters, Chief Brooks, of the secret service, and Cohen, who all testified to the worth of Mr. Miller in the warmest terms, and the report was adopted. Messrs. A.M. Clapp, of the Republican, and C.S. Noyes, of the Star, were selected to represent the newspaper fraternity as pall-bearers. The resolutions were ordered to be engrossed for transmittal to Mrs. Miller.

The funeral took place at 2 o'clock this afternoon from the late residence of Mr. Miller, No. 919 G street, and it was attended by many of the friends of deceased, including representatives of the press and numerous business houses, and the employees of the Critic. The religious services were conducted by Rev. Dr. A.W. Pitzer, of the Central Presbyterian church, who paid a feeling tribute to the memory of the deceased. The pall-bearers were Messrs. A.M. Clapp, of the Republican; C.S. Noyes, of the Star; A.L. Hazeltun, Louis Barr, Henry Franc, G.F. Timms, L. Lansburg and E.G. Davis. The remains, in full dress suit, were encased in a handsome walnut casket, covered with black cloth and silk velvet, with massive silver bar handles and plate on the breast, inscribed: "J. Carpenter Miller: Died August 30, 1880: Aged 48 years." The floral decorations were most beautiful and tasteful, and quite enveloped casket. During the morning large numbers of the friends called to view the corpse, there being at the residence a continual stream of visitors going and coming, and in the number were many of the younger members of the community, who, as newsboys, had been brought in contact with the deceased. At the conclusion of the services at the house the corpse was borne to the hearse, and followed by a long line of carriages containing relatives, friends and acquaintances, it was taken to Congressional Cemetery, where the interment was made under the supervision of Mr. W.R. Speare.

Miller, John
b. 23 Oct 1850 - d. 27 Feb 1909
Miller. On Saturday, February 27, 1909 at 2 p.m. at Atlantic City, New Jersey, John Miller in his 58th year.
Funeral from his late residence, Woodlawn, Cleveland Park. Interment Congressional Cemetery.

The Evening Star, February 27, 1909
Obsequies For John Miller
Services Monday for Dead Brick Manufacturer
Succumbs at Atlantic City to Internal Troubles
Family at His Bedside in Last Moments
The funeral of John Miller, prominent in local business affairs for years, who died at Atlantic City yesterday afternoon, will be held Monday at 2 o'clock. The details for the services have not been completed. The remains have been brought to Washington, where the obsequies will be held.

Mr. Miller went to Atlantic City two weeks ago to recuperate from an attack of internal and muscular trouble, from which he had suffered at various times for several years. Instead of improving, his condition became worse.

His daughter, Mrs. B. Wilson Brocket of Cleveland, and his son, William C. Miller, a student at Yale University, joined the other members of the family at the seacoast resort. Mrs. Miller and one son and daughter went to Atlantic City with Mr. Miller.

John Miller was born in England 58 years ago, but came to Washington at the age of 23 years. At the time of his death he was one of the prominent business men of the city.

He turned his attention to the manufacture of brick soon after coming here and gained much experience from manufacturers of this vicinity. Several years ago he became president of the Washington Brick and Terra Cotta Company.

He was a member of several fraternal bodies, among them Masonic orders of the Scottish Rite and the Mystic Shrine. During the last campaign he took much interest in the work of the democratic party in this city.

The members of his family who survive him are his wife, his sister, Mrs. A.M.P. Maschmeyer, his daughters,
Agnes Miller, Sarah Miller and his sons, Henry Miller, William C. Miller and Allison Miller.

The Evening Star, March 3, 1909
John Miller's Will Filed
Estate in Trust to Widow
The will of John Miller, dated March 20, 1908, provides a bequest of $1,000 to Mrs. Ann Miller Maschmeger and the cancellation of all her obligations to him. The remaining estate is devised to his widow, Mrs. Sarah
B. Miller, in trust to use the income for her maintenance and the care of the children until her death or remarriage.

Should she remarry she is to take one-third of the personal estate absolutely, and a third interest in the real estate for life. The remaining estate shall be distributed equally among the children.

Should the widow die before the youngest child attains majority, John H. Miller and William C. Miller, sons of the testator, are to become trustees and hold the property during the minority of the youngest child.

Mrs. Miller is named as executrix.

Margaret D. Miller Dies -- Washington Woman Descendant of Early Settlers
Miss Margaret Dove Miller, a descendant of the early settlers of this country, and for many years a resident of Washington, died of pneumonia at her residence, 331 Sixth street southeast, Sunday. Funeral services were conducted at the residence yesterday. Interment was in Congressional Cemetery. Miss Miller was about 80 years old.

She was the daughter of the late Dr. Aaron Miller for many years a prominent physician of this city, and who was active in charity work here following the Civil War. Miss Miller's mother was the late Mrs. Julia Woodward Miller, a great-granddaughter of Lady Ann Perrott, who ran away from England with Benjamin King to Gretna Green and married, later coming to this country. Miss Miller was the granddaughter of Maj. Amon Woodward, who fought with the American Army in the War of 1812, and was awarded a tract of land by the Government for his services.

Miss Miller was born in this city, but moved with her parents to Danville, Va., at the outbreak of the Civil War, where Dr. Miller was in charge of the Confederate hospital. They moved back to Washington, however, just after the war.

She is survived by a sister, Miss Mary B. Miller, who nursed the Confederate wounded at Danville.

The Evening Star, October 2, 1912
Rev. Dr. N.H. Miller, Union Veteran, Dead
Clerk of Presbyterian Synod and G.A.R. Official, Victim of Paralysis
Rev. Dr. N.H. Miller, stated clerk of the Presbyterian Synod of Baltimore, which is made up of the Presbyteries of Washington, New Castle, Del., and Baltimore, died at his home at McLean, Va., near Falls Church, at 10 o'clock this morning. His death was due to a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered Sunday evening about 8 o'clock.

Dr. Miller, in addition to his duties as synod clerk, was connected with a bureau of the War Department. He had never given up ministerial duty, occupying a pulpit near his home each Sunday morning. During the afternoon Sunday he complained of slight illness, and later he suffered the paralytic stroke.

Was an Officer in G.A.R.
Dr. Miller was junior vice commander of the G.A.R., Department of the Potomac.
No arrangements have been made for the funeral, but Adjt. Gen. O.H. Oldroyd of the department said today that the Grand Army would participate, and that the burial may be in Arlington, if Dr. Miller's family acquiesces. Rev. T.E. Davis, pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, and stated clerk of the Presbytery of Washington, went to the Miller home this afternoon, and on his arrival, it is expected, arrangements for the funeral services will be completed.

Dr. Miller always took a deep interest in the work of the G.A.R., as he did in his church affiliations. For a time before becoming junior vice commander of the Department of the Potomac he served as department chaplain of the organization.

Planned Memorial Day Program

He was for several years in charge of the Decoration day exercises held annually in Congressional Cemetery under the auspices of the Grand Army. His choice of orator for the occasion in that cemetery last May was former Representative Harvey S. Irwin of Louisville, who in preceding years had made addresses at Stone River and other historic battlefields of the civil war. At the close of the exercises Dr. Miller was widely congratulated on the program he had supervised.

Miller, Major Thomas
d. 26 Jan 1834
The National Intelligencer, January 29, 1834

Departed this life suddenly, in this City, about 8 o'clock in the evening of the 26th instant, Major Thomas Miller, aged 70 years; a native of the town of Port Royal, in the State of Virginia, and long one of the most enterprising, highly respected, and valuable residents of that town. Major Miller became a resident of this City about 12 years since, and has, during the greater part of that time acted as a Clerk in the Navy Department. The writer of this hasty notice has known the deceased intimately, more than half a century, and is warranted in saying, that no individual ever did possess, in a higher degree than he did, all those moral and social qualities, which constitute and characterize the good man and good citizen. He has left a beloved wife, a large family of children and grand-children, and an extensive circle of devoted friends, to lament the loss of this important link in the chain of their affections and long established friendship. The funeral of the deceased will take place, at his late residence on 13th Street, at 12 o'clock This Day.

Clerk Navy Department, dwelling Six Buildings, Pennsylvania avenue (Wash. Dir., 1830).

Mills, Ella Mills - The Evening Star, August 1, 1864

Sad Accident

On Saturday evening, while a party of little girls were playing on the pavement in front of the shoe store of Mr. John Mills, on Pennsylvania avenue, east of 3d street, a box, in which were encased the shutters of the store window, fell upon little Ella Mills, a child of 12 years, and daughter of Mr. John Mills, and caused a compound fracture of the skull; the box striking upon the right side of the head. A number of physicians were speedily called in, and did all in their power to relieve the miseries of the little sufferer. Dr. N.S. Lincoln was called upon, and performed a surgical operation, taking out a large portion of the skull. Dr. L. pronounced it one of the most serious fractures he had ever seen, yet strange to say, the sufferer, although so young, has fully retained her senses, and recognizes all the members of her family. She is convinced that she must die, and, with an affectionate regard for those she leaves behind, has divided all her trinkets, toys and playthings as remembrances, among her family and friends. She has borne her sufferings with a fortitude that would do much credit to an older person. The family is plunged in the most poignant grief, and it is to be hoped that the physicians; among whom, in addition to Dr. Lincoln, are Dr.s Riley, Dove, Young, and Todd, will be able yet to save the life of the sufferer.

Architects Pay Tribute to Mills
Monument at Grave Is Dedicated-Roosevelt Letter Read
Tribute to the memory of Robert Mills, first Federal architect, was paid at Congressional Cemetery yesterday when a monument, erected at his grave by a group of architects, was dedicated in the presence of Mills' descendants and many interested architects and admirers of his work.

A message from President Roosevelt, lauding Mr. Mills' work was read.

"Every visitor who comes to Washington," wrote the President in a message to Edwin B. Morris of the Monument Committee, "is impressed with the classic beauty of the Treasury, the Patent Officer and the Land Office, notable among the structures designed by Mills.

"Of all the monuments in our National Capital, the one outstanding in silent, solemn grandeur is that which Mills designed and which the Nation erected in memory of Washington. None but a very great genius could have evolved in his mind such a lofty conception of the greatness of a man and of a great Nation's love for that man. I am truly glad that belated tribute is to be paid to Mills' memory."

The message was read by Francis P. Sullivan, who presided.

The memorial was unveiled by Mrs. Robert Mills Evans of this city, great granddaughter of Mr. Miles. Other members of the family present included a great-grandson. Robert Mills Dimitry, of Brooklyn, N.Y., with his wife, and a great-great-grandson, Richard X. Evans, of this city. A letter of appreciation was read from Mills' surviving grandson, Thomas Dabney Dimitry, of New Orleans, unable, on account of age, to be present.

Rear Admiral Christian Joy Peoples, director of procurement for the Government, was the principal speaker. He praised the work of Mills, declaring he was an "inspiration and example" to his successors.
Louis A. Simon, supervising architect of the Treasury's Procurement Division, said Mills' work "breathes the spirit of all that is universal and permanent in beauty, undimmed by the passing of years."

David Rankin Barbee, author and historian, reviewed the life and works of Mills comprehensively, declaring his buildings here "express the majesty, the dignity and the beauty of our country."

The grave of Mills had remained unmarked by monument for more than 80 years. The memorial was designed by P.G. Golden and Harry Cunningham.

Death of Judge Mills Noted in Police Court
Adjournment Is Taken Out of Respect to Memory of Justice

The District branch of the Police Court adjourned today in respect to the memory of former Municipal Court Judge Samuel C. Mills, whose death occurred Saturday. At the conclusion of the day's business, Assistant Corporation Counsel Gus A. Schuldit called the attention of the court to Judge Mills' death.

"It is but proper that this court adjourn as a mark of respect to the memory of Judge Mills because of his long association both personal and official, with the members of the Police Court staff." Mr. Schuldit said, "He was known and beloved by all of us. His personal traits were such as to win the regard of those who came in contact with him, either on or off the bench."

Death a Personal Loss

"It was always a pleasure to appear before him here when he occupied the bench, or his own branch in the Municipal Court. I, and I am sure the judges of the court, feel a keen personal loss in his death. I ask that the court adjourn to his memory."

Judge Mullowny said he had known Judge Mills for many years, and had found him a stanch friend, an able and capable public official and a representative resident of the District. Because of personal attachments, he said he felt the death of Judge Mills keenly.

"He was my friend as a young lawyer, then an assistant prosecuting attorney, and finally as judge in this court. My regard for him was that veneration a young man owes an older man who has always proven himself a stanch and true friend," added Judge Mullowny.

In ordering the adjournment, Judge Mullowny instructed Clerk N.C. Harper to note the fact on the court minutes.

It is probable the Police Court judges and the clerk's staff will attend the funeral tomorrow in a body.

Judge Mullowny adjourned the District branch of the Police Court for an hour, from 10 to 11 o'clock this morning to permit himself and the court attaches to attend the funeral of Judge Mills.

White's failure to return home last night was not reported to the police this morning. He was married, but had no children.

In the pockets of the dead man's clothes the superintendent of the morgue found some political documents, a bottle that had contained whisky and a pipe. Coroner Nevitt made an investigation of the affair and deemed an inquest unnecessary. A certificate of accidental death was given and the body turned over to relatives for burial.

Minnick. Roy Minnick aged 7 years 2 months who was struck and killed by a cable car Wednesday, October 5, 1892 will be buried from his father's residence, 407 E street southeast at 2 o'clock on Friday.

The Evening Star, October 5, 1892
Killed by a Grip Car
Roy Minnick, a Little Newsboy, Mangled to Death
This morning about 10 o'clock a fatal accident happened on the cable road, at the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and 4th streets southeast. The victim was a seven-year-old boy named Roy Minnick, who sells newspapers. He was endeavoring to dispose of his papers when he lost his life.

He had been away from his home several hours before the news of his death reached the ears of his parents. With a companion named Perry Bents he was near the corner mentioned, and was waiting for the arrival of a cable train coming west.

"You had better not jump on that car," said Perry, by way of advice.

"Yes," replied Roy, "I am going to get on and sell my papers."

Perry turned and started in the direction of his home, but he had not gone far before he heard some shouts, and turning he saw the mangled form of his companion and playmate beneath the wheels of a heavy grip car.

The accident was a shocking one and was witnessed by passengers on the cars going in opposite directions. The injuries to the boy had rendered him unconscious. He was beyond the aid of medical skill, although physicians were promptly on hand. He was removed to Providence Hospital in the patrol wagon. He died about an hour after reaching the hospital.

Reports as to how the affair happened do not agree. The police knew nothing of the circumstances at noon, but persons in the neighborhood where the accident happened say it was the result of the boy's recklessness, and not the fault of the gripman. They say that the boy was standing near the east-bound track watching the car coming west and that he moved over just in time to get against the car going east. The gripman, it was stated, rang the bell, called to the boy and attempted to stop the train, but did not succeed until after the fatal injuries had been inflicted.

The boy's right leg was cut and crushed by the wheels and his body was also injured. His face was not disfigured.

The boy's parents live at No. 407 E street southwest. His father, Barnett Mirrick, is a plasterer, and was at work when the fatal accident occurred.

Coroner Patterson was notified of the killing and an inquest will probably be held tomorrow.

Of consumption, in the 23rd year of her age, Diana, wife of William H. Minnix, and youngest daughter of the late Thomas Sandiford, Esq., of this city.

In the death of this truly estimable lady society has lost one of its brightest ornaments. Long and well has she been known in our community, where her modest and retiring manners, cheerful and affectionate disposition, and great purity of heart and life have endeared her to all who were so fortunate as to make her acquaintance. Her early departure has left a large circle of mourning friends and a bereaved husband, who, while they lament her absence, sorrow not as those who have no hope, for she died triumphing in her Redeemer, and with a rich foretaste of the joys that awaited her beyond the tomb. The Evening Star, August 25, 1890
In Memoriam
Minnix. The recent death of Miss Lottie Minnix, of Anacostia has cast a gloom of deep sorrow over her many friends. How strange and mystical are His ways who is “Too wise to err and too good to be unkind.” In the fresh bloom of young womanhood, she was early called to “go hence, from whence no traveler returns” severing the tender cords that bound her to the hearts of many. She was a young lady of strong, pure character and unwavering principle. No one was more appreciative of or quicker to praise an act prompted by noble impulse. She loved God's poor, sympathized with and did for them as far as she could. Though stricken and called upon to suffer four months almost without cessation, she was never heard to complain of the afflictive dispensation, not even asking the "why." So full of hope, so many cherished hopes to be realized, yet as those dear to her watched by her they saw a gradual giving up of all nearest her heart and in entire submission saying: "Thy will, Oh God, not mine, be done."

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep.

Those of her loved ones left will anxiously await the Master's summons, when they will greet her again in the "home not made with hand, eternal in the heavens."

Minnix, Mary F.

Minnix. Suddenly on Thursday, September 17, 1925 at her residence, 102 15th street northeast, Mary F. Minnis beloved wife of the late John Thomas Minnis. Services will be held at her late residence on Saturday, Sept. 19 at 3 p.m. Relatives and friends invited to attend. Interment Congressional Cemetery. (Baltimore papers please copy).

The Late Funeral at the Navy Yard

On Sunday last, at the funeral of Mr. Lewis Meinzeshammer, a late Sergeant of the Marines, and member of Union Lodge of Odd Fellows, a scene was enacted not at all creditable to the person causing it who went much out of his way, and far overstepped the bounds of modesty to interfere with his neighbors.

The funeral procession started from the Barracks in the received order –i.e. the Marines first, the Odd fellows next, after whom came the body, following which were the mourners, etc. The procession had proceeded some ways on the road to the grave yard, when an order was given to put the Odd Fellows behind the hearse, as mourners. As the order came from the commandant of the U.S.M.C., and was expected to be complied with by the funeral escort, the Odd Fellows broke from the line and returned to their lodge room. A committee of three were appointed to wait on General Henderson, and seek an explanation of this strange and unprecedented proceeding.

The General stated that the deceased was a soldier, and as such he claimed him, and claimed the right to bury him with the honors of war, and the right to command; and if his rights in that respect were interfered with, he should give an order that his men should not join the beneficial societies, or be refused a military funeral.

Now, I contend, the deceased was not a soldier to be claimed by a Brigadier General by Brevet, or any one else, even a Lieutenant of Marines acting Aid-de-Camp. Death gave him a discharge, and then his remains belonged to his family and his friends. They wished the Order to bury him, nor would they have felt any chagrin had the Marines not escorted the remains to the grave.

From the earliest recollections of our oldest citizens, funeral processions have always been formed as this was on Sunday, and all was right. The Grand Lodge of the United States says the Order shall precede the body to the grave, and throughout the world this is the first time the rule has ever been set, or attempted to be set aside. The last funeral of this kind was, I think, that of the late Captain Dove, at which the procession was formed by the Marines, and four different associations preceded the body, and no one was sufficiently wise to find the matter wrong, because they knew it was right. I think General Henderson made here a great error, one which he would never have made, had he been left to himself; but he was drawn into it by the officiousness of his Aid, whose sin in this respect has passed from him to his father. The greatest wrong committed was by the Order in leaving the line, thus indirectly admitting the right of General Henderson to interfere in the arrangements.

Death of Mary Mirick

*Was Teacher in Washington Schools for 35 Years

Miss Mary Mirick, well known to the teachers of the public schools and to many of the citizens of the capital, died last evening at the Baptist Home for Old Ladies, 3248 N street northwest. Miss Mirick was in her 85th year. She was a sister of the late Rev. Stephen Mirick, for many years a pastor in one of the local Baptist churches, and of the late Mr. William Mirick, prominent as a music teacher. She was the last of her family.

As she was for many years a member of Grace Baptist Church, East Washington, the funeral services will be conducted by the pastor of that church, Rev. William M. Nevins. The funeral will take place tomorrow at 2:30 o'clock p.m. from the home. Interment will be made at the Congressional cemetery.

Miss Mirick was for thirty-five years a teacher in the local public schools. She was appointed in August, 1857, and had charge, successively, of many of the small grammar schools of Capitol Hill before the inauguration of the modern school system. At the Wallach building, the first modern school and now the oldest in the system, Miss Mirick taught for many years.

"I owe all the training of my educational life to Miss Mary Mirick" said an East Washington principal this morning. She was a skilled musician and many of the older teachers and successful principals now engaged in the school system received their early training at Miss Mirick's hands.

In June, 1892, Miss Mirick was retired by the board of education, and for several years was protected by the devotion of her former pupils and friends, who seven or eight years ago secured her entrance into the Baptist Home. After the erection of the new dormitory Miss Mirick had the room of honor in the home, which was furnished by the Young People's Baptist Union of the Second Baptist Church, Rev. E. Hez Swem, pastor. Many of these young people are grandchildren of the teacher's former pupils.

It is stated upon good authority that it was the retirement of Miss Mirick by the board of education which caused that movement among the teachers which resulted shortly after in the inauguration of the Teachers' Aid and Annuity Association which has as one of its laws the retirement of teachers upon an adequate annuity after thirty-five years of service.

Miss Mirick's public services are held in grateful remembrance by hosts of teachers and parents on Capitol Hill many of whom have been her constant attendants in her years of decline.

Funeral of Miss Mirick

The funeral services of Miss Mary Mirick were held yesterday afternoon at the Baptist Home for Old Ladies, Geogetown, at 3 o'clock. Rev. W.M. Nevins, pastor of Grace Baptist Church, of which the deceased had been a member, officiated.

Miss Mirick for thirty five years was a teacher in the public schools and for years was in charge of the Wallach building. Many of her friends among the older teachers and the residents of Capitol Hill attended the services. The interment was made at the Congressional cemetery.

The National Intelligencer, June 29, 1832
It gives us pain to have to announce the decease of another member of Congress, the Hon. George E. Mitchell, one of the representatives from Maryland, who died yesterday. He has been for more than a year past laboring under disease, has been able to attend his public duties only occasionally since he arrived here in December last, and has not been expected, we believe, by his friends, to outlive the session. From some friend of his we expect some notice of the character and services of the deceased. He was a distinguished officer of the army during the last war, and universally esteemed and respected by all who knew him, for the several years that he was subsequently in public life.

The National Intelligencer, June 30, 1832
In The House of Representatives
After the journal of the previous day's proceedings we read --
Mr. Howard, of Maryland, rose and thus addressed the House:

Mr. Speaker: It has devolved upon me to communicate to the House, the decease of George E. Mitchell one of the Representatives of the State of Maryland. The infirm state of health in which he had been for a long time past, must have been apparent to every one, until at length, the struggles between a naturally robust constitution, and an inverteate disease, are over, have terminated in his decease, and he now sleeps with his fathers. It is but a short time, since, we were called on to pay the last melancholy tribute of respect, and to follow to the tomb the remains of one of our body, who was suddenly cut off in the meridian of his usefulness, and now, we find our ranks again broken. These events force one reflection of my mind, which I crave leave to express. Whilst in the performance of our duties, we are prescribing laws for others, we find ourselves the subjects of a system of other laws, which we had no share in enacting. Sire, there is no Republic in the government of the Universe; and yet how absolute is the necessity, how absolute the obligation, of obedience to the Deity, who, in his wisdom, has framed that code. I will not attempt now or here, to portray the life or character of the deceased. The spontaneous offer, on the part of the military authorities of the city, to join in such testimonial of respect as the House may order sufficiently demonstrates that the name of Mitchell is inscribed on the rolls of Fame. Whilst in the service of his country, during the recent war, his brilliant defense of the Fort of Oswego, with which he was entrusted, won the applause due to successful valor: returning from his military career, and embarking in all the turmoils of political life, he brought into this House a frankness of deportment, unobtrusive efficiency, and such steady judgment, that I may with perfect safety assert that he won the friendship of those who knew him well, and obtained respect from all. Let us withdraw awhile from the cares which surround us here, and unite in paying the last tribute of respect to his memory. In order that we may do so, I submit to you the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Members of this House will attend the funeral of the late Geo. E. Mitchell, at 5 o'clock, p.m.

That a Committee be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of George E. Mitchell, deceased, late a member of this House, from the State of Maryland.

That the members of this House will testify their respect for his memory by wearing crape, etc.

It was then ordered that a Message be sent to the Senate to notify to them the death of Mr. M., and the hour that his funeral would take place.

Mr. Howard, Mr. Thompson, of Georgia, Mr. Blair, of S.C., Mr. Alexander, Mr. Carson, Mr. Dearborn, and Mr. Ward, were named as the Committee.

After which, the House adjourned.

The Eveniing Star, July 23, 1938
District Traffic Claims 4th Child Victim in Week
David Marshall Mockabee is Crushed Between Truck and Auto
Driver is Arrested on Drunken Charge
13 of 49 Killed on Streets so Far This Year Have Been Youngsters
The fourth child victim of traffic accidents in the past week died yesterday afternoon at Providence Hospital, despite valiant efforts to save his life through blood transfusions.

The victim was 12-year-old David Marshall Mockabee, 1 L street S.E., who was crushed between an ice truck parked in front of his home and an automobile driven, police said by Walter Jackson, 27, colored of 24 B street S.E.

The child's mother, Mrs. Emma Mockabee, was among a number of persons who offered their blood for the transfusions.

Young Mockabee died about 2:30 p.m. A companion Edwin Schneider 15, of 337 D street S.E., was inside the ice truck when the accident occurred. He was thrown to the ground and suffered scalp cuts.

Driver is Arrested
Police arrested Jackson as the operator of the death car and charged him with driving while drunk. He was held for a coroner's inquest, the time of which will be set later.

The Mockabee boy's death was the 49th traffic fatality so far this year. It occurred less than 24 hours after 9-year-old Robert Williams, 402 Forty-third street N.W. was killed by an automobile near his home while riding a sled on wheels.

Alarmed by a new high record in child fatalities during the first six and a half months of 1938, Inspector William E. Holmes, in charge of traffic enforcement, issued special instructions to patrolmen last night.
The patrolmen were told to halt children riding bicycles double or riding scooters or wagons in the street.

The officers also were ordered to take the names of children who seemed in danger and to notify their parents.

Thirteen Children Killed

Thirteen children under 16 have been killed in Washington by automobiles since January 1, or more than 26 percent of the total number of deaths.

Meanwhile a coroner's jury which investigated two traffic deaths yesterday ordered a man and a woman held for Police Court under the negligent homicide act. The two held were drivers of cars which collided at Longfellow street and Georgia avenue N.W. on July 7. Vincent J. Casey, 27, of 2325 Fifteenth street N.W. was killed in the accident.

The drivers were Mrs. Susie Jean Gelder, 22, of 2325 Fifteenth street N.W., operator of the car in which Mr. Casey was a passenger, and John W. Everett, 2, of 18 Rittenhouse street N.W. They were released on $500 bonds each.

The same jury absolved Newitt Vanhook, 44, colored, of 211 Morgan street N.W. of blame in the death of 3-year-old Joseph Lee Davis of 122 E street S.E. The child was struck Wednesday while crossing the street in front of his home by a Bureau of Fisheries truck operated by Vanhook.

Mockabee, Edwin Levi

Mockabee. On Sunday, the 11th inst., at 8 o'clock, of diphtheria, Edwin Levi, the only son of Thomas and Mary E. Mockabee, aged 4 years 10 months and 17 days.

That once loved form, now cold na dead,
Each mournful thought employs;
We weep our earthly comforts fled,
And wither'd all our joys.
Hope looks beyond the bounds of time,
When what we now deplore
Shall rise in full, immortal prime
And bloom to fade no more.

The funeral will take place from the residence of his parents, on south L street, between 4 1/2 and 6th streets on Tuesday, the 11th at 2 o'clock p.m. The friends of the family are invited to attend.

Mockabee, George W.

Mockabee. Departed this life on March 27, 1894, George W., the beloved husband of Mary J. Mockabee.

Those busy hands are folded,
His work on earth is done;
His warfare on earth is ended,
His battles fought and won.

Father, dear, how much we miss thee,
Miss thy kind and gentle care;
It is God that has bereft us,
In God we trust and dry our tears.

By His Children

Funeral of G.W. Mockabee
Services Yesterday in Tribute to Civil War Veteran*
The funeral of George W. Mockabee took place from his late residence, 415 6th street southeast, this afternoon, where the services were conducted by the Rev. Mr. Howlett of the Second Baptist Church. In addition to the relatives and friends, there were present large delegations of Harmony Lodge of Odd Fellows, of Farragut Post, Grand Army of the Republic, and of the Old Guard of the G.A.R., respectively, who followed the remains to Congressional cemetery, where interment was made.

Mr. Mockabee died Friday last from a complication of diseases, which had confined him to his home for several months. He was of a prominent family of that name, and was a native of this city. In his youth he ran with the Columbia Fire Company in the old volunteer department. He was born in 1846, and while he was yet a boy, during the civil war, he ran away from home and after an absence of two weeks he appeared at his old home fully accoutered as a cavalry-man. He served throughout the war.

Returning to civil life, he learned the painting business, which he carried on for several years. His wife and four sons survive him.

The Evening Star, July 23, 1938
District Traffic Claims 4th Child Victim in Week
David Marshall Mockabee is Crushed Between Truck and Auto
Driver is Arrested on Drunken Charge
13 of 49 Killed on Streets so Far This Year Have Been Youngsters
The fourth child victim of traffic accidents in the past week died yesterday afternoon at Providence Hospital, despite valiant efforts to save his life through blood transfusions.

The victim was 12-year-old David Marshall Mockabee, 1 L street S.E., who was crushed between an ice truck parked in front of his home and an automobile driven, police said by Walter Jackson, 27, colored of 24 B street S.E.

The child's mother, Mrs. Emma Mockabee, was among a number of persons who offered their blood for the transfusions.

Young Mockabee died about 2:30 p.m. A companion Edwin Schneider 15, of 337 D street S.E., was inside the ice truck when the accident occurred. He was thrown to the ground and suffered scalp cuts.

Driver is Arrested
Police arrested Jackson as the operator of the death car and charged him with driving while drunk. He was held for a coroner's inquest, the time of which will be set later.

The Mockabee boy's death was the 49th traffic fatality so far this year. It occurred less than 24 hours after 9-year-old Robert Williams, 402 Forty-third street N.W. was killed by an automobile near his home while riding a sled on wheels.

Alarmed by a new high record in child fatalities during the first six and a half months of 1938, Inspector William E. Holmes, in charge of traffic enforcement, issued special instructions to patrolmen last night.
The patrolmen were told to halt children riding bicycles double or riding scooters or wagons in the street.

The officers also were ordered to take the names of children who seemed in danger and to notify their parents.

Thirteen Children Killed

Thirteen children under 16 have been killed in Washington by automobiles since January 1, or more than 26 percent of the total number of deaths.

Meanwhile a coroner's jury which investigated two traffic deaths yesterday ordered a man and a woman held for Police Court under the negligent homicide act. The two held were drivers of cars which collided at Longfellow street and Georgia avenue N.W. on July 7. Vincent J. Casey, 27, of 2325 Fifteenth street N.W. was killed in the accident.

The drivers were Mrs. Susie Jean Gelder, 22, of 2325 Fifteenth street N.W., operator of the car in which Mr. Casey was a passenger, and John W. Everett, 2, of 18 Rittenhouse street N.W. They were released on $500 bonds each.

The same jury absolved Newitt Vanhook, 44, colored, of 211 Morgan street N.W. of blame in the death of 3-year-old Joseph Lee Davis of 122 E street S.E. The child was struck Wednesday while crossing the street in front of his home by a Bureau of Fisheries truck operated by Vanhook.

Daniel J. Moffett Dead
Passing of an Octogenarian Resident of the District
The recent death of Daniel J. Moffett at the advanced age of eighty-four years removed from active life one who had been a resident of the District of Columbia for more than half a century. The deceased belonged to a family which has been noted for its longevity, besides being distinguished for its total abstinence of the use of liquor and tobacco in any form. A brother, Rev. Addison Moffat, now residing in California, is eighty-two years of age, and another brother, Judge John A. Moffat, who resided in Wisconsin, lived to be eighty-seven years of age.

The deceased leaves a widow, two daughters and a son, who are all residents of this city. Rev. Dr. Skellinger, his pastor, officiated at the funeral service, and, in his sermon paid a glowing tribute to the worth and sterling character of the deceased. He was a man of many excellent qualities of heart and mind and will be sadly missed by the lifetime circle of friends to whom his genial, whole-souled nature had strongly endeared him.

Return of Dr. T.B. Mohun

Dr. T.B. Mohun has returned here from an extensive trip through Mexico in the interest of a mining enterprise. As stated in a telegram published in The Star, Dr. Mohun has brought with him information concerning the discovery of three or four hundred skeletons, whom he believed to be of Chinese, by whom he holds that the country was settled. As soon as Dr. Mohun has recovered his usual health he will return to Mexico.

The Evening Star, July 14, 1903, p. 1

Dr. Mohun's Skeletons

Dr. W.J. McGee Not Inclined to the Belief That They Are Chinese

Dr. W.J. McGee, in charge of the bureau of ethnology, has not yet had an opportunity to study the photographs and other evidence brought here by Dr. Mohun relating to a find of 300 or 400 skeletons in Mexico. But Dr. McGee is not inclined to the belief that these are skeletons of Chinese, as hinted at by Dr. Mohun, nor until after very careful investigation will he be likely to accept the suggestion that they are exclusively skeletons of women. There are tribes of Indians whose cranial formation, size of bodies and color of hair might very closely resemble the Chinese. Dr. McGee has long been acquainted with the “skeleton caves” west of the locality described by Dr. Mohun, and for several years has been planning to visit them. It is quite likely that within the next year or two he will be able to go there, and if he does so he will be able to visit the locality described by Dr. Mohun. He regards Dr. Mohun's discovery as of great interest as a basis for investigation.

Coroner Nevitt viewed the body at the morgue and gave a certificate of accidental death.
|              | After he had gone a short distance Moise was seized with a cramp and called to his companions for assistance. George Hoffman and E.G. Graham jumped into the water to try to reach him, but he sank beneath the surface and did not reappear.

_A Fireman Drowned_

About 11 o'clock today, the body of an unknown white man was found floating in the James creek canal, at G street south, and it was removed to the first precinct station house. The coroner directed the removal of the body to Buckley's undertaking establishment. The body was dressed in a black frock coat, cloth vest and pants, kip boots, and appeared to be that of a man 35 or 40 years of age, five feet eight inches in height, medium build, light hair and heavy mustache, and the figure "5" 2as tattooed on his left forearm. It is supposed that it is the body of Levi Molling, of No. 6 engine company, residing at 491 G street southwest.

Later--The remains were identified by the foreman of No. 4 fire engine company (from which company he was lately transferred) and No. 6, as those of Mr. Moling. He left No. 6 house (Massachusetts avenue between 4th and 5th streets) on Tuesday morning, on leave for 24 hours, but failed to return yesterday morning. It is supposed that he, in the darkness of the night on Tuesday, walked overboard. He leaves a widow and four children.

Life Crushed Out

Samuel C. Mollahan, R.R. Flagman, Killed By Cars

Samuel C. Mollahan, fifty-four years of age, who was employed as a flagman on the Pennsylvania railroad, fell from a train of empty coaches near the New Jersey avenue crossing yesterday afternoon, and his life was crushed out. He had boarded the outgoing train of empty coaches, it is believed, thinking the cars were going only as far as the roundhouse, and when he discovered they were to be taken to the Anacostia yards he made an effort to get off the train. Railroad men who were near the scene of the accident think Mollahan either lost his footing or that he was jostled from the train.

A passenger train came along just as Mollahan jumped or fell from the freight car and the wheels passed over his body and legs, killing him instantly. His body was removed to the morgue and the coroner notified. A certificate of accidental death was given and relatives were told that they could have an undertaker prepare the body for burial.

Mollahan lived at 518 K street southeast. His wife and three children, two daughters and a son, survive him. Mrs. Mollahan was out of the city on a visit yesterday and was summoned home. Arrangements for the funeral had not been completed this morning. It is likely, however, that it will take place tomorrow or Saturday and that the interment will be in Congressional cemetery.

His Friends Alarmed
Police Asked to Locate Charles R. Monroe
Relatives of Charles R. Monroe, part owner of a local brick business, are greatly alarmed over his disappearance.  It is said he left his home, 914 North Carolina avenue northeast, last Friday morning, and nothing has since been heard of him.  Some of his friends say the missing man had been troubled about money matters for several weeks.  His financial troubles did not involve debts to others, it is stated, but were caused by his inability to collect money due him.

The missing man is fifty-four years of age, is six feet two inches in height and of slender build.  He had a heavy mustache and short beard when he went away from home Friday morning.  He wore a suite of dark clothes and a black slouch hat.  During the past few weeks he had discussed his financial troubles with his relatives, and so greatly was he troubled that it was feared his mind would become unbalanced.  There was nothing about his conduct Friday morning to indicate that he was suffering from any mental disorder, however, and when he left home is wife certainly expected he would return about the usual time.

When he failed to return home that night his wife became alarmed, but, hoping he would return later, she hesitated about calling upon the police for assistance.  Saturday she consulted her brother-in-law, James Monroe, who was a partner in the brick business with her husband, and she then concluded she would ask the police to assist her in her efforts to find her missing husband.  The brothers conducted the business of Monroe Brick Company, 20th and B streets southeast, James Monroe living in Maryland.

Charles Monroe has been in the brick business in the southeast section of the city for many years.  He had the reputation of always doing business upon a thoroughly reliable basis.  It is said that many thousands of dollars are owing him, and his inability to collect is believed to have had something to do with his disappearance.  A photograph and description of the missing man were furnished inspector Boardman, and the police of the several precincts have been notified to be on the lookout for him.

There is no record at police headquarters that the missing man is ill, and it is known he is not in a local hospital for treatment.  Inquiries among his friends failed to show that any of them had seen him since Friday morning, when he left home to go to the brick yard.  Friends fear that he wandered away from the city and that something serious has happened to him.

The Evening Star, March 19, 1907, p. 8
Believed To Be Dead
Suspected That Chas. R. Monroe Shot Himself
Description of Missing Man Tallies With That of "C.R. Morgan,"
Who Committed Suicide
Relatives of Charles R. Monroe, the brick manufacturer who disappeared from his home, 914 North Carolina avenue, last Friday morning, as stated in yesterday's Star, express the confident belief that the missing man killed himself in a hotel in Atlanta, Ga., Sunday afternoon.  A press dispatch from Atlanta yesterday, telling of the suicide of a man who had registered as "C.R. Morgan, Norfolk, Va.," attracted attention.  Mr. James L. Schaaf and Mr. W.D. Abrams, brothers-in-law of the missing man, called upon Inspector Boardman and Lieut. Peck after reading the dispatch, and had the police officials communicate with the Atlanta authorities.

In response to a message sent to Atlanta, Chief of Police Jennings of Atlanta wired the police here that the description of the dead man tallies with that given of Monroe.  Chief Jennings stated that the deceased was about the age of Monroe, fifty-four years, and that he was bald and had a heavy beard.  The message stated that there was a gold hunting-case watch in the pocket of the dead man's clothing, and that he wore a thirty-second degree Masonic charm.  It was also stated that the body had not been identified.  Chief Jennings gave no particulars of the suicide, but press dispatches say he committed suicide in the Kimball House by shooting himself.

Initials in Signature the Same

In the absence of anything which would assist the Atlanta police to identify the body, the suggestion was made that the body was that of W.F. Walker, the absconding banker from New Britain, Conn., and the New Britain authorities were communicated with. The signature of the man on the hotel register contained the initials of Monroe, however, the name Morgan being probably substituted for Monroe. The two brothers-in-law of the missing brick manufacturer called at police headquarters this morning and again conferred with Lieut. Peck. Later they got into communication with the Atlanta authorities, and when they had concluded one of them remarked: "I'm afraid it's Monroe's body."

The overcoat, hat and shoes found in the room in the Kimball House bear the marks of the Washington dealers from whom Monroe purchased such articles. The only discrepancy was that the watch found on the dead man was a hunting-case timepiece, while the brothers-in-law said that Monroe carried an open-face watch. It is stated, however, that the number of watch in Atlanta tallies with that given by the jeweler from whom Monroe made his purchase. A photograph of the man who committed suicide is expected to reach here late this afternoon, and then the question of identity will be settled.

When Monroe left his home last Friday he said nothing to his wife about going away. Mrs. Monroe knew that her husband had been greatly worried over his failure to collect money due him, and some of the near relatives thought the worry had affected his mind. They say that at times he acted rather peculiarly, and they were not greatly surprised when they heard he had disappeared, but they were shocked today when they learned of the probability of suicide.

Reasons for Belief in Suicide

On account of the unsatisfactory condition of the business here, Monroe had thought of going to Atlanta or Birmingham to start in the brick business. His friends now believe that he went to Atlanta for the purpose of finding a business opportunity, and that after reaching there he felt that he was not strong enough to begin business negotiations with strangers.

Mr. Monroe it is stated, entered suits against persons who had dealt with his firm, and one case was settled in his favor shortly before he disappeared. He was from near Fort Foote, Prince George county, Md., but had lived in this city many years. Should there be a positive identification of the body when the photograph reaches here this afternoon, his relatives will direct that the remains be shipped here for interment.

It is stated that about $200 in cash was taken from the pockets of the dead man's clothing.

Picture Identified

Dead Man in Atlanta Proves To Be C.R. Monroe

Maj. Sylvester received a message from the chief of police of Atlanta, Ga., this morning, inclosing a photograph of the man who committed suicide there Sunday night, as heretofore stated in The Star, and it was identified as a likeness of Charles R. Monroe, the missing brick manufacturer. Mrs. Monroe was told of the identification of the photograph, and was greatly affected by the sad news. While she had feared the body in Atlanta was that of her husband, she still had hope that it would be otherwise, and the shock was very severe. The body is at an undertaking establishment in Atlanta, and the undertaker has been notified to forward it to this city. It is believed it will reach here tomorrow night. The funeral will probably take place from the late home of the deceased, 914 North Carolina avenue southeast.

Arrangements have been made to bring the body of Charles R. Monroe, who committed suicide in the Kimball House at Atlanta, Ga., last Sunday, to this city for burial. It is expected that the remains will reach here about 8 o'clock this evening. Undertaker Lee will take charge of the body and remove it to the late home of the deceased, 914 North Carolina avenue. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

Monroe, the brick manufacturer, who committed suicide at Atlanta, Ga., to take place from his late residence, 914 North Carolina avenue, at 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. The body reached here from Atlanta last night and was removed from the depot.

His Friends Alarmed

Police Asked to Locate Charles R. Monroe

Relatives of Charles R. Monroe, part owner of a local brick business, are greatly alarmed over his disappearance. It is said he left his home, 914 North Carolina avenue northeast, last Friday morning, and nothing has since been heard of him. Some of his friends say the missing man had been troubled about money matters for several weeks. His financial troubles did not involve debts to others, it is stated, but were caused by his inability to collect money due him.

The missing man is fifty-four years of age, is six feet two inches in height and of slender build. He had a heavy mustache and short beard when he went away from home Friday morning. He wore a suite of dark clothes and a black slouch hat. During the past few weeks he had discussed his financial troubles with his relatives, and so greatly was he troubled that it was feared his mind would become unbalanced. There was nothing about his conduct Friday morning to indicate that he was suffering from any mental disorder, however, and when he left home is wife certainly expected he would return about the usual time.

When he failed to return home that night his wife became alarmed, but, hoping he would return later, she hesitated about calling upon the police for assistance. Saturday she consulted her brother-in-law, James Monroe, who was a partner in the brick business with her husband, and she then concluded she would ask the police to assist her in her efforts to find her missing husband. The brothers conducted the business of Monroe Brick Company, 20th and B streets southeast, James Monroe living in Maryland.

Charles Monroe has been in the brick business in the southeast section of the city for many years. He had the reputation of always doing business upon a thoroughly reliable basis. It is said that many thousands of dollars are owing him, and his inability to collect is believed to have had something to do with his disappearance. A photograph and description of the missing man were furnished inspector Boardman, and the police of the several precincts have been notified to be on the lookout for him.

There is no record at police headquarters that the missing man is ill, and it is known he is not in a local hospital for treatment. Inquiries among his friends failed to show that any of them had seen him since Friday morning, when he left home to go to the brick yard. Friends fear that he wandered away from the city and that something serious has happened to him.

Believed To Be Dead

Suspected That Chas. R. Monroe Shot Himself

Who Committed Suicide

Relatives of Charles R. Monroe, the brick manufacturer who disappeared from his home, 914 North Carolina avenue, last Friday morning, as stated in yesterday's Star, express the confident belief that the missing man killed himself in a hotel in Atlanta, Ga., Sunday afternoon. A press dispatch from Atlanta yesterday, telling of the suicide of a man who had registered as "C.R. Morgan, Norfolk, Va.," attracted attention. Mr. James L. Schaaf and Mr. W.D. Abrams, brothers-in-law of the missing man, called upon Inspector Boardman and Lieut. Peck after reading the dispatch, and had the police officials communicate with the Atlanta authorities.

In response to a message sent to Atlanta, Chief of Police Jennings of Atlanta wired the police here that the description of the dead man tallies with that given of Monroe. Chief Jennings stated that the deceased was about the age of Monroe, fifty-four years, and that he was bald and had a heavy beard. The message stated that there was a gold hunting-case watch in the pocket of the dead man's clothing, and that he wore a thirty-second degree Masonic charm. It was also stated that the body had not been identified. Chief Jennings gave no particulars of the suicide, but press dispatches say he committed suicide in the Kimball House by shooting himself.

In the absence of anything which would assist the Atlanta police to identify the body, the suggestion was made that the body was that of W.F. Walker, the absconding banker from New Britain, Conn., and the New Britain authorities were communicated with. The signature of the man on the hotel register contained the initials of Monroe, however, the name Morgan being probably substituted for Monroe. The two brothers-in-law of the missing brick manufacturer called at police headquarters this morning and again conferred with Lieut. Peck. Later they got into communication with the Atlanta authorities, and when they had concluded one of them remarked: "I'm afraid it's Monroe's body."

The overcoat, hat and shoes found in the room in the Kimball House bear the marks of the Washington dealers from whom Monroe purchased such articles. The only discrepancy was that the watch found on the dead man was a hunting-case timepiece, while the brothers-in-law said that Monroe carried an open-face watch. It is stated, however, that the number of watch in Atlanta tallies with that given by the jeweler from whom Monroe made his purchase. A photograph of the man who committed suicide is expected to reach here late this afternoon, and then the question of identity will be settled.

When Monroe left his home last Friday he said nothing to his wife about going away. Mrs. Monroe knew that her husband had been greatly worried over his failure to collect money due him, and some of their near relatives thought the worry had affected his mind. They say that at times he acted rather peculiarly, and they were not greatly surprised when they heard he had disappeared, but they were shocked today when they learned of the probability of suicide.

Reasons for Belief in Suicide

On account of the unsatisfactory condition of the business here, Monroe had thought of going to Atlanta or Birmingham to start in the brick business. His friends now believe that he went to Atlanta for the purpose of finding a business opportunity, and that after reaching there he felt that he was not strong enough to begin business negotiations with strangers.

Mr. Monroe it is stated, entered suits against persons who had dealt with his firm, and one case was settled in his favor shortly before he disappeared. He was from near Fort Foote, Prince George county, Md., but had lived in this city many years. Should there be a positive identification of the body when the photograph reaches here this afternoon, his relatives will direct that the remains be shipped here for interment.

It is stated that about $200 in cash was taken from the pockets of the dead man's clothing.

Picture Identified

Dead Man in Atlanta Proves To Be C.R. Monroe

Maj. Sylvester received a message from the chief of police of Atlanta, Ga., this morning, inclosing a photograph of the man who committed suicide there Sunday night, as heretofore stated in The Star, and it was identified as a likeness of Charles R. Monroe, the missing brick manufacturer. Mrs. Monroe was told of the identification of the photograph, and was greatly affected by the sad news. While she had feared the body in Atlanta was that of her husband, she still had hope that it would be otherwise, and the shock was very severe. The body is at an undertaking establishment in Atlanta, and the undertaker has been notified to forward it to this city. It is believed it will reach here tomorrow night. The funeral will probably take place from the late home of the deceased, 914 North Carolina avenue southeast.

Monroe's Remains to Be Interred Here

Arrangements have been made to bring the body of Charles R. Monroe, who committed suicide in the Kimball House at Atlanta, Ga., last Sunday, to this city for burial. It is expected that the remains will reach here about 8 o'clock this evening. Undertaker Lee will take charge of the body and remove it to the late home of the deceased, 914 North Carolina avenue. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

The Evening Star, October 9, 1895
Killed by Escaping Gas
A Veteran Soldier Supposed to Have Died Through His Own Mistake

John Montague, an elderly white man, who for thirty years wore the uniform and carried arms for the United States, was found dead in bed this morning at Schneider's Hotel, near the navy yard gate. He was asphyxiated by escaping gas, evidently the result of an accident, as there is no reason known why he should have committed suicide.

Montague was about sixty years of age. For several years past he has made his home at Schneider's, where he was known as a jovial and happy dispositioned man who had many friends in the neighborhood and among the marines and sailors at the yard. Last night he retired to his room on the second floor of the annex, which is across the street from the main hotel, at the corner of 8th and L streets southeast, in the best of humor, though not in an intoxicated condition. About 10 o'clock this morning a maid went to awaken him, but when she rapped on the door she received no response.

She summoned aid, and finally the door was broken in, whereupon the fumes of escaping gas poured out into the hall and made it evident what had caused the death of the man, whose body lay upon the bed. It is supposed, for nothing is definitely known about it, that in some way he turned the gas on without noticing it after he had extinguished the light. The gas fixture was in good condition and the cock was not defective.

The coroner was notified and will investigate the case this afternoon. The body will be interred at government expense at Congressional cemetery. Montague served as a private in the fifth cavalry all through the war, and saw much active service. In 1872 he left the army and entered the United States Marine Corps, serving altogether for thirty years. When he received his honorary several years ago, he went to live at the hotel, which he had made his home ever since. He had two sons living in Philadelphia, who wanted him to go there, but he preferred to stay near the navy yard and his old friends.

Holiday diamond sales enrich terrorist network
By Donald Mooers and Etta Toure
Washington -- Years before the mass killings at the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, Osama bin Laden and his al-Qaida network were responsible for the death and maiming of tens of thousands of helpless children and civilians in the West African nation of Sierra Leone.

Last year, several U.S.-based groups supported in part by Baltimore schoolchildren, brought six Sierra Leonean child amputee victims to the United States for treatment, artificial limbs and a visit to Congress. Their innocence had been robbed by vicious rebels who calmly hacked off the arms and legs to terrorize the adults of their diamond-rich villages and towns.

Earlier this month, journalists confirmed al-Qaida's direct link to Sierra Leone's diamonds. The country's Revolutionary United Front (RUF) and other bin Laden proxies in the area masterminded and oversaw the deliberate amputations for control of the diamonds.

These diamonds threaten America. The pipeline continues to flow from the mines of Sierra Leone to the diamond markets of Europe and then to jewelry stores in the United States. Americans buy an estimated 65 percent of the world's diamonds and 75 percent of diamond jewelry is bought during the forthcoming holiday season. Americans buy an estimated an estimated 65 percent of the world's diamonds and 75 percent of diamond jewelry is bought during the forthcoming season. Americans no longer remain complacent about diamonds mined in Sierra Leone.

By purchasing diamond jewelry, Americans may be directly helping bin Laden and Al-Qaida finance their war on terrorism against us. Conflict, or "blood," diamonds take on a whole new meaning because the proceeds from their sale finance the purchase of bullets and bombs. The war in Sierra Leone has destroyed what remained of the country's educational, health and judicial systems. Decades of corruption and inattention had already weakened the country's infrastructure when the war over diamonds began in 1990.

We recommend a three-part program to address the flow of diamonds from Sierra Leone to bin Laden and al-Qaida:
- American consumers should stop buying diamonds until a system of reliable certification can be put into place that guarantees their source of origin.
- The United States should, as a component of NATO's Article V powers governing the alliance's response to the attack on the United States, mobilize NATO troops to monitor Sierra Leone's diamond mining activities.
- As the military situation in Sierra Leone stabilizes, the United States and the international community should commit the resources necessary to assist the country to create institutions promoting a civil society, including the judiciary, education, health and social services systems.

The United States is long overdue in getting serious about cutting off the financial pipeline of the people who want us dead.

We must end the terrorists' supply of easy money by getting them out of Sierra Leone.
Until decisive action is taken on conflict diamonds, Americans pondering the purchase of a diamond ring this holiday season need to know that their decision could be the difference between bin Laden and al-Qaeda outfitting another terrorist aiming to kill us.

Donald Mooers, a former State Department senior adviser and former Peace Corps volunteer in Sierra Leon, practices immigration law in Washington. Etta Toure, borne in Sierra Leone, is a volunteer project director for Friends of Sierra Leone.

Shoots Woman; Tries Suicide
Tragic Sequel to Double Lives of Infatuated Pair
Both Are Near to Death
William White Fires Twice at Mrs. Annie Moore
First Met at Local Hospital
Both Are Married -- Man's Wife Had Tried in Vain to Break Rival's Power
William White, fifty years of age, and Mrs. Annie Moore, thirty-three years, are at the Emergency Hospital in a critical condition, the result of a tragedy enacted this morning in a back room at 476 M street southwest. White shot Mrs. Moore through the head and left hand and then turned the pistol on himself in an effort to end his own life.

Wife Threatens Wife
White's duties called him to all the buildings on the grounds and it was while making his rounds each day that he came in contact with Mrs. Moore. It was not until after the members of the Moore family left the quarantine station that Mrs. White experienced any trouble with her husband. She learned of his infatuation and called on Mrs. Moore several times to induce her to keep away from her husband, even going so far as to threaten to choke her to death if she caught her on the streets wearing a picture of White which Mrs. Moore had. Mrs. Moore ordered Mrs. White from her house when she called upon her, and gave her to understand that she had as much claim to White as Mrs. White had.

Calls White Unbalanced
"But," said Mrs. White to a Star reporter this morning, "last night I was happier than I had been for a long time because of the great change which had taken place in my husband. He brought two boxes of oysters home with him and we chatted together and enjoyed them, reminding me of the days before he became so friendly with the Moore woman.

"But," she added, "All the blame should not be placed upon him. That woman was running after him all the time and he seemed as if he could not resist her. My husband was not in the right mind, however, having received an injury to his head when he was a boy. Lately his actions seemed so queer that I was afraid he was going crazy. He would sit about the house, pull his hair and tell of how his head hurt him, and only last night he said his skull was pressing against his brain."

Wife Finds Revolver

Mrs. White said that her husband had been in the employ of the Southern Railway Company. He was born in Richmond, she said, but had been here since he was a boy. The Moores had lived in Alexandria some time ago. It was stated by Mrs. White that her husband had probably purchased the revolver Tuesday or yesterday, as he had pawned a weapon he had once had and had given the ticket to his married son, who is employed on a street railway. Her husband, she said, was exceptionally pleasant last night, and she went to bed feeling that her future was to be much happier than the past three years of her life. This morning, she said, when she went to the lower floor she happened to brush against her husband's overcoat and felt something hard in one of the pockets of he garment. She soon saw that what she had touched was a revolver, but she thought nothing of it, having an idea that he had obtained it from the pawnbroker to take to the Philippines.

Finds Husband Unconscious

About 9 o'clock this morning, Mrs. White said her husband left the house telling her he was going as far as the car barn at the foot of 4 1/2 street. She stood at the front door and watched him until he reached the corner of N street and then she returned to her duties in the house. A little more than one hour after she saw him walk down the street a small child came to her house and told her of the tragedy. She hurried to the M street house, but her husband was unconscious and unable to recognize her. Mrs. White repeated what she had said about her husband's mental condition and suggested that his defense would be insanity in the event of his recovery. Others who were in the house also said they thought his mind had been affected for some time.

Three Shots Heard

At the time of the shooting the only persons on the upper floor were White and Mrs. Moore. On the lower floor were Mrs. Nettie Daniels, her two small children and Mrs. Willie Ann Doleman. They say White when he appeared at the house about twenty minutes before the shooting occurred. He met them in the lower hall and asked if Mrs. Moore had gone out. Then he went to her room, and had been there about twenty minutes when three pistol shots were fired. Mrs. Daniels and Mrs. Doleman became alarmed and rushed from the house, taking the two children of the former with them. No time was lost in telephoning for assistance, and a crowd of curious persons remained about the house until after the wounded ones had been taken to the hospital. The two children of Mrs. Moore, Margaret, seven years of age, and Heloise, twelve years of age were at school when their mother was shot. They were sent for by Mrs. Daniels and turned over to relatives who live in South Washington.

Bodies on the Floor

Alfred Gibbs, a member of the fire patrol, living at 1325 Huntoon place, was the first person to enter the room after the shooting occurred. He found the man and woman on the floor together, the head of the woman resting on the side of the bed. He made an effort to lift the man, and as he did so the revolver fell to the floor, but where it was before it fell he cannot say. He thinks it was probably resting upon White's body. There was very little blood in the room, all that was visible being spots on the bed. Gibbs remained at the house until the arrival of the police, and he assisted the latter in removing the wounded couple to the patrol wagon.

Husband Summoned

An effort was made to find Mr. Moore, who is employed as a harnessmaker at 400 14th street, but he could not be summoned until after his wife had reached the hospital. It is stated that he had remained away from his wife's home for some time. He had been recently sleeping at the M street house, however, and was there last night. He went to work early this morning, and his wife had about completed her housework when White called. Mrs. Daniels said that White had been in the habit of coming about her house whistling for Mrs. Moore. The latter, she said, had told her she wanted nothing more to do with him. She had told him, she said to Mrs. Daniels, that she wanted him to let her alone and that if he did not do so she would find somebody who would keep him away.

It is believed that when White called upon Mrs. Moore this morning she objected to his visit and that he became enraged and the shooting followed. Occupants of the house say hey are certain that Mrs. Moore had tried to get rid of White, but that he was persistent and would not let her alone.
Investigation Follows
Inspector Boardman sent Detectives O'Brien and Mullen to make an investigation of the affair. They visited the scene of the shooting and also called upon Mrs. White. At the M street house they questioned Mrs. Daniels and Mrs. Doleman and were told that Mrs. Doleman heard only two shots, while Mrs. Daniels said she heard all three of them. It is thought the first shot took effect in the woman's head, entering just above the left ear. The second bullet, it is thought, went through Mrs. Moore's hand.

The bullet that passed through the would be murderer's head also went through the head of the bed, carrying splinters from the bed and a small bunch of hair against the wall.

Dr. William B. Carr of the Emergency Hospital took charge of the wounded persons and proceeded to do what he could for them. He soon reached the conclusion that the case of the woman was hopeless, while that of the man was not much better, although, he said this afternoon, there was a possibility that the man might live some time. Both patients were unconscious when they reached the hospital.

Mr. Moore called at the hospital this afternoon to inquire about his wife's condition. He said he had been separated from her for about two years, returning to live with her only a short while ago. He told the policeman on duty at the hospital that his troubles were caused by White. He left the hospital without seeing his wife.

Mrs. Moore Dies
One Victim of Tragedy Passes Away at Hospital
Mrs. Annie Moore, who was shot through the head yesterday morning by William White while at her home, 476 M street southwest, died at the Emergency Hospital last evening about 6 o'clock.

White regained consciousness last night and Dr. White and his assistants, Drs. Heflebower and Carr, inserted a tube in the hole in the head of the wounded man. His condition this morning showed a slight improvement. A policeman from the fourth precinct is detailed at the hospital to see that the patient makes no effort to escape, as a charge of murder is to be preferred against him should he recover.

Acting Coroner Glazebrook has arranged for the holding of the inquest over the remains of Mrs. Moore tomorrow morning at the morgue.

Biographical Directory of the United States Congress 1774-1989
A Representative from Ohio; born in Plainfield, Washington County, Vermont, August 27, 1809; pursued an academic course; studied law in Rochester, New York; was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Columbus, Ohio; elected as a Democrat to the 28th Congress and served from March 4, 1843 until his death in Columbus, Ohio, April 3, 1844; interment in Green Lawn Cemetery.

The National Intelligencer, April 8, 1844
Letters were received in this city on Saturday, announcing the death of the Hon. Heman Allen Moore, one of the Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio. He left this city a week or two ago, in consequence of ill-health, for his residence at Columbus. He grew worse as he proceeded, but lived to reach his home, where he died on the 3d instant. His death will be announced today in the House of Representatives by one of his colleagues.

The National Intelligencer, April 9, 1844
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Obituary
Mr. Weller, of Ohio, rose and addressed the House as follows:
Mr. Speaker: Death has again been amongst us. Another of our associates has been taken from this Hall, and transferred to another, and I trust a better world—to a house not “made with hands, eternal in the heavens.” My colleague, Heman Allen Moore, who but a few days since stood upon this floor as one of the proud Representatives of a great and powerful State, now sleeps in the silent tomb; his spirit rests in the hands of the Creator. He died at his residence, (Columbus, Ohio) on Wednesday morning, the 3d instant.

Gen. Moore came here at the commencement of the present session apparently in good health, but, after a few weeks’ labor in this Hall, was stricken by a disease which, although sometimes slow in its progress, never fails in the end to baffie the skill of the most successful physician. Consumption had fastened its fangs upon his vitals, and after a few months of suffering, closed his career. He left this city on ____ for his family, with foreboding that his days were few and numbered, and that he would not live to return to his post. Notwithstanding his debility, it will be remember that, on the day preceding his departure, he was upon this floor, warmly and zealously advocating and carrying through a bill in which a portion of his immediate constituents felt a deep solicitude. It was the last act of his political life.

The deceased was a native of Vermont, where he received a liberal education. He studied law in Rochester, New York, and, after completing his professional studies and forming a matrimonial alliance, removed to Columbus, Ohio, where he maintained a respectable standing at the bar. At the time of his decease he was about thirty-four years of age. After a residence of only six or seven years in Ohio he was appointed Adjutant General, and soon after, at the last Congressional election, selected as the Representative upon this floor of one of the largest and most respectable districts. Notwithstanding he was a young man, comparatively a stranger, and with no experience whatever in legislation, his stern integrity, strict morality, useful talents, and unflagging perseverance, gave undoubted assurance that in his hands the interests of the people would never be compromised. I need scarcely say to those who witnessed his brief career as a Representative that this confidence was not misplaced.

It is perhaps difficult to engage actively for any length of time in the exciting scenes of party strife without incurring the enmity of those whose interests, opinions, or feelings may be counter to ours. Political differences too often affect our private relations, and convert into enemies those who, under other circumstances, would have been bound together by the strongest ties of friendship. General Moore, however, had no enemies in this hall. Open, frank, and independent in the maintenance of those principles which he conscientiously believed were inseparably connected with the prosperity of the country, yet kind, courteous, and conciliating towards those who differed with him, he gave offense to none. Whilst he enjoyed the unlimited confidence of his political friends, he always retained the respect and esteem of his opponents.

It is some consolation to his friends here to know that he reached home in time to receive the kindness and attention of his family “in the hour and article of death.” He died not amongst strangers and in a strange land, far from his home and kindred, but in the bosom of his family, and surrounded by a generous constituency, who had honored him with their confidence, and whose regard he so richly merited. An amiable and devoted wife hung over his bed of suffering and smoothed the pillow of death. No condolence of ours, however sincerely offered—no tears of sympathy, be they ever so profusely shed, can heal the agonized heart of the bereaved widow. To her the loss is irreparable. He upon whom she had placed her hopes of happiness in domestic life, he around whom all the warm affections of her heart had been gathered, and whom she loved with all the enthusiasm and devotion of her sex, the father and protector of her three helpless children, has been torn from her bosom forever. The heart that once beat in unison with hers has ceased to pulsate forever. The eye of affection, which once carried joy and gladness to her soul, has been closed by the cold hand of death. The partner of her pleasures and pains, the idol of her heart, has gone to that land where “sin and sorrow are known no more,” “where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.” That God “who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb” can alone console and sustain her under this afflicting dispensation. May we not also hope that He who has promised to be a “father to the fatherless” will watch over and protect the helpless orphans left to mourn the loss of an earthly parent.

Day after day are we admonished of the certainty of death and the uncertainty of the time thereof. How often has the truth been forced upon our minds by impressive lessons that “in the midst of life we are in death.” Today the politician stands in this hall, the proud representative of a free people, commanding by his genius our respect and engaging our attention; tomorrow comes a withering frost, and those lips of eloquence, which could once arouse the soul to all the sublime feelings of patriotism and valor, become motionless and silent, to be heard no more. “The grass withereth and the flower fadeth.” But a few days since my deceased friend and colleague sat by my side watching over the interests of his constituents with a zeal that never tired, a vigilance that never flagged; today he sleeps in the silent grave, his voice has been hushed and will no more be heard in this hall. This seat which once knew him will know him no more forever.

He had but just commenced his career on the busy theatre of life. Honored with a seat in the national councils, happy in his domestic relations, surrounded by kind and devoted friends, looking forward with high hopes of future honor and usefulness, he has been cut down in the morning of life by the unsparing hand of death. “Life’s fitful fever is over,” and no man shall see him more. Oh!

“What shadows we are, what shadows we pursue.”

Should not the number of our associates who have been stricken down from our side within the last few months admonish us of the littleness of our controversies here, the uncertainty of our sojourn on earth, and the necessity for being prepared to take our departure to that “bourne whence no traveler returns?” Let us be ready, “for no one knoweth the day nor the hour when the Son of man cometh.”

As a tribute of respect to the memory of our deceased friend and late associate, I offer the following resolutions and ask their adoption:

Resolved, That this House has heard with the liveliest sensibility the annunciation of the death of the Hon. Herman Allen Moore, late a member from the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That this House tenders to the family and relatives of the deceased the expression of its sympathy on this afflicting event, and as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members and officers will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That, as a further testimony of respect, this House will now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted. Whereupon the House adjourned.

Moore, James  d. 25 Sep 1853
The Evening Star, September 27, 1853
On last Sabbath morning, Mr. James Moore, one of our oldest and most worthy citizens. Mr. Moore was of the number of those, now reduced to a very few, who saw our city in its infancy, having come to reside among us more than half a century ago. Being a printer by profession, he was employed in days long gone by in the office of the National Intelligencer, even before this ancient journal came into the hands of its present venerable and respected editors. For many years past he discharged with scrupulous fidelity the duties of a place of trust in the office of the Treasurer of the United States. For a period of about thirty years he was a ruling elder in the First Presbyterian Church of this city, and at the time of his death was the oldest elder in the church. How conscientiously he performed the duties of that sacred office is well known to his brethren in the eldership and members of the church. His bereaved widow and children have by this dispensation been deprived of an affectionate husband and father. He has descended to the grave full of years, and having long lived the "life of the righteous, so his last end was like his." The news of his death fell sadly on many hearts; and numerous friends and the church he served, and with whom he so long worshipped, will cherish the memory of their departed Elder Moore.

The funeral will take place from the First Presbyterian Church, on 4 1/2 street, this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Lieut. Moore of Police Force III
Lieut. Moore of Police Force III
James A. Moore, lieutenant of the first police precinct, suffered an attack of acute indigestion while riding on an H street car yesterday afternoon. He was assisted to his home at 13th and I streets northeast by friends, and was attended by Dr. J. Ramsey Nevitt. His condition was serious when he reached home, but last night he was out of danger. He was unable to be on duty today, and Sergt. James Hartley was acting lieutenant.
James A. Moore, lieutenant of the first police precinct, is dangerously ill at his home, 13th and I streets northeast. About a week ago Lieut. Moore was taken sick while on his way home and had to be assisted. Dr. Nevitt, his attending physician, considered his condition to be of so serious a nature yesterday that he called in Dr. William P. Carr to see the patient. Should there be a change for the worse during the next few days it may be necessary for the surgeons to perform an operation.

Attended only by the physicians and nurses, his wife having returned home at a late hour last night, James A. Moore, lieutenant of police, died at Georgetown University Hospital this morning about 8:30 o'clock. He had been ill about two weeks, but had been in the hospital only since last Thursday afternoon. For almost a week the patient was delirious and was wholly unconscious when removed to the hospital. His attending physicians were unable to hold out any hope of recovery at the time of the transfer to the hospital, an operation being regarded as the only possible means of saving or prolonging the lieutenant's life.

So many were his friends and so great their anxiety that the hospital telephone was kept in use almost continuously yesterday. Late in the afternoon when it was found that friends of the lieutenant were monopolizing the use of the telephone, Maj. Sylvester sent a message to the several police precincts giving information of the patient's condition, and requesting that members of the department refrain from using the hospital telephone. Relatives of the patient remained at the hospital until a late hour last night, and then found it necessary to depart without encouraging news.

While the death of the police official was not unexpected it was a shock to his friends. Expressions of sympathy have been received from many sources.

Captains Amiss and Gessford conferred with the widow of Lieut. Moore this morning and assisted in making arrangements for the funeral which will be held at the family home, probably next Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. G.C. Bacon, pastor of Douglas Memorial Church, will officiate. The interment will be in Congressional cemetery. A general order is to be issued to the members of the force by Maj. Sylvester tomorrow announcing the death and giving the details of the funeral arrangements. It is probably that a police escort will accompany the remains to the grave.

Lieut. Moore was a member of Roosevelt Garrison, Army and Navy Union, his membership being based upon a long and honorable career in the regular army. Commander J.J. Gordon of that garrison upon learning of the death arranged to hold a meeting of the organization next Monday evening, when arrangements will be made to attend the obsequies in a body, and resolutions of condolence and regret will be adopted.

The death of Lieutenant Moore creates a vacancy in the police department that will be filled by the promotion of a sergeant. While it is highly probable that Major Sylvester will take no action in the matter of filling the vacancy until after the funeral, some of the sergeants are already preparing to enter the contest for the promotion. Those whose names have already been prominently mentioned in connection with the promotion are William H. Harrison, W.F. Falvey, J.A. Duvall, R.E. Doyle, James Hartley and J.L. Sprinkle. Sergeant Harrison is stationed at the White House, and the others are on duty in precincts. Sergeant Hartley being connected with the first precinct, where he is now performing the duties of lieutenant. It is probable that almost every sergeant on the force will make an effort to secure the appointment.

In the death of James A. Moore, Maj. Sylvester loses one of his most valued assistants. Lieut. Moore became connected with the police force shortly after Maj. Sylvester, accepted the position of chief clerk to Maj. William McE. Dye, and during his long years of service he was in close touch with the present superintendent of the force. When Lieut. Kelly, the veteran of the police department, surrendered the position of lieutenant and Maj. Sylvester wanted a man to fill the vacancy he selected James A. Moore because he knew him to be a man of sterling worth. As private and sergeant he had filled important positions in the first and third precincts, having received his early instructions under T. Brooke Amiss, now captain in charge of police headquarters at night. While on duty in the first precinct he came in contact with most of the business men of the city and also gained a knowledge of how to handle lawbreakers of different classes.
Lieut. Moore was an even-tempered man who always expected those under him to do their full duty. He had the reputation of being a man who dealt fairly and honestly with the members of his command and had no favorites. It was because of his fairness and impartial dealing, it is said, that he gained so many friends among the substantial businessmen and among the members of his command. Only a few days ago he worked with Detective Baur and Hartigan, Precinct Detectives Mullen and Vermillion and others upon a murder case, spending several days and nights with them. He remained with the men until the alleged slayers of Morris J. Holloran were arrested and then gave the men credit for what they had done, claiming none for himself.

Cause of His Popularity
That was only one of many similar cases, and it was because of his uniform fairness that he came to be one of the most popular members of the official family of the chief of police. He served as lieutenant of the sixth precinct from the 16th of January, 1900, until the 1st of last July, when he was transferred to the command of the first precinct to succeed Lieut. Amiss, who was promoted and detailed at headquarters. His first police duty was performed the 10th day of December, 1884, at which time he was appointed a private of class I. Eight years later he was made a sergeant and sent to the first precinct. The 16th of January he was promoted to lieutenant and placed in charge of the sixth precinct, where he remained until the vacancy occurred in the first precinct.

The deceased was a native of Maryland, having been born in Prince George county the 27th day of February, 1850. He tired of country life when he was a young man and came to this city. His appointment to a position on the police force was made at the time stated and he lost but little time from his labors during the twenty-two years he was connected with the department.

Before becoming a member of the force he spent five years as a cavalryman, and was one of the best drilled members of his troop. He was a member of the Army and Navy Union, but was not connected with any other organization. He was married about twenty years ago. His wife and eight children survive him. His home was at 1255 1st street northeast.

Funeral of Lieut. Moore
Services Tuesday Afternoon in Douglass Church
The remains of the late Lieut. James A. Moore, commander of the first police precinct, who died at George Washington University Hospital yesterday morning, were removed to an undertaking establishment and prepared for burial. Later in the day the body was taken to the late home of the deceased, 1255 1st street northeast. Arrangements have been made for funeral services to be conducted at Douglass Memorial Church at 11th and H streets northeast at 2 o’clock Tuesday afternoon. The interment will be in Congressional cemetery, alongside the bodies of two children of the deceased.

Lieutenant Moore was born in Prince George county, Maryland, near Surratsville, and was a nephew of Mrs. Surratt, who was executed shortly after the assassination of President Lincoln. The deceased was extremely popular with the members of the police force, and the latter are making arrangements to show their love for him by providing for the payment of the few hundred dollars he owed on his home at the time of his death.

It is highly probable that the pallbearers will be selected from among the members of the police force, his widow having already expressed a desire that several of the close personal friends of her husband be requested to act in the capacities indicated. The names she suggested include those of Captain Amiss, Detective Thomas P. Hartigan, Precinct Detective Charles Mullen, Sergeant Lee, Sergeant Murphy and Samuel D. Gibson. Captain Amiss will not be able to act, however, as he will have charge of the police detail at the funeral.

Past National Commander Hugh H. Henry has directed all comrades of Gen. William F. Barry Garrison, No. 26, and Admiral David D. Porter, No. 6, Army and Navy Union, who can do so to unite with Roosevelt Garrison Tuesday afternoon in attending the funeral of Lieutenant Moore.

Death of Lieut. Moore
Announcement Made by Major Sylvester in General Order
Maj. Sylvester issued a general order to the members of the police department yesterday regarding the death of Lieut. James A. Moore, stating that it was with deep regret and great sorrow that he made the announcement. The order states:

"Lieutenant Moore was appointed a private of the force December 10, 1884, promoted to sergeant July 1, 1892, and to lieutenant January 16, 1900."
"The career of this officer is worthy of emulation, he having attained a record for diligence, honesty, courage and good judgment which assured for him the high esteem of his superiors and the unquestioned confidence of the community. While early in the service he applied himself to acquire an education, which opportunity through force of circumstances, was not afforded in his childhood, and in this laudable effort he well succeeded.

"He was loyal to his work and alive to the public interests; devoted to his family and respected by his associates, and the department will mourn his untimely loss.

"Out of respect to his memory, it is ordered that a detail of two captains, four lieutenants, six sergeants and thirty-two privates be in attendance at the last ceremonies over the deceased. The detail will be under the command of Capt. T.B. Amiss and the members will report to him at 1:30 p.m., the 20th instant, at the late residence of the deceased, Nod. 1255 I street northeast."

Funeral services over the remains will be held at Douglass Memorial Church tomorrow at 2 o'clock, as stated in The Sunday Star. Many members of the police force, other than those who will compose the detail, will attend the funeral. Floral remembrances will be sent by the police at headquarters and from several of the stations. The remains will be interred in Congressional Cemetery.

_Ex-Bank Official Dies at Home Here_

Joseph Gales Moore, 83, Was Former National Metropolitan Cashier

Joseph Gales Moore, 83, former cashier of the National Metropolitan Bank and actively connected with that institution for 61 years, died today at his home, 2940 Upton street. He had been in poor health for some time, but had been seriously ill only about a month.

Mr. Moore retired about five years ago from active connection with the bank. He started his work in finance as a messenger boy back in the days before the organization of the Washington Clearing House Association, where runners had to go from one bank to another, making check collections. During his 61 years in banking he witnessed many changes in banking methods. During the last years of his career he served the Metropolitan as auditor.

Began Work in 1867

Mr. Moore began his work with the Metropolitan on July 22, 1867, shortly after his graduation from Rittenhouse Academy. When not doing messenger work he was asked to give assistance to the paying teller, and this gave him his real start. The young messenger showed such ability and interest in his work that he was soon made an assistant bookkeeper. For 20 years he worked in all departments of the bank and became an expert in every phase of banking.

In May 1895 he was appointed assistant cashier and became cashier in December, 1900, succeeding George W. White, now president of the bank. He was made auditor in 1909, and, although not a director, he had the distinction of serving the board as secretary for 18 years.

Native of the District

A native of Washington, Mr. Moore was born here on July 29, 1850. His active banking career came to an end August 1, 1928. During part of the time that he was connected with the Metropolitan, he also was manager of the Washington Clearing House Association.

Before he reached such an advanced age, M. Moore was active in the Presbyterian Church. He was a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants.

He is survived by one son, Gales P. Moore of Bristol, Conn., and three daughters, Miss Anne B. Moore of Washington, Mrs. Lathrop E. Baldwin, South Orange, N.J. and Miss Kate C. Moore of Washington. His wife, Kate Carroll (Pritchard) Moore, died several months ago.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

Death of Col. Moore -- Superintendent of Police Passed Away This Morning
His Long and Useful Life -- Prominent in the History of City and Country
Funeral Arrangements
Colonel William G. Moore, major, and superintendent of the police department of the District, died this morning at his home, 1710 L street northwest. Surrounded by his immediate family, but unable to recognize any one of the faithful and loving watchers, the gallant soldier and capable executive officer, who for years has devoted all his life's efforts in providing for the safety of the people now mourning his loss, gradually sank, until at 6:25 o'clock he breathed his last. The end was not unexpected, but the grief was none the less keenly felt.

Major Moore had been unconscious for some time prior to his death. It was known as early as Saturday night last that the case was one that passed beyond all human aid. The family and many friends who anxiously inquired for some reassuring news as to the condition of the ill chief were prepared for the worst. Yesterday morning it was not thought Major Moore would survive the day. As evening approached, however, he seemed to breathe more easily than for many hours past, and a slight flicker of hope was ignited in the breasts of the loving relatives at his bedside. After nightfall the major gradually grew worse. Everything that love could suggest was done to relieve his last hours.

Weary from their constant vigil, some of the family had fallen asleep early in the evening, but there were at the dying man's bedside to the last his devoted wife, his daughter, Mrs. Mary J. Smoot, and Detective Rhodes, who had served with the chief for many years, and who had been Major Moore's aide practically throughout the latter years of his term as head of the police department.

With the first faint streaks of a cloudy and dismal dawn this little group, which had steadfastly watched his every movement, saw that the end was indeed near. Although unconscious, it could be seen that a great struggle between life and death was waging in the old warrior's breast. His iron constitution yielded most reluctantly to the ravages of dread disease, fighting every advance made upon the vitality that was fast failing. It was with the utmost effort that Major Moore at last caught his breath. Just before the icy hand of the grim destroyer finally descended, however, to claim the loving husband and devoted father, he seemed to be easier, and expired at last with no sign of pain. Jovial and cheery in life, Major Moore's countenance in death was one of repose and divine contentment.

The Funeral
Complete arrangements for the funeral have not been concluded. The services will take place from the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church on Thursday afternoon at 2 or 3 o'clock, and the interment will be at Congressional cemetery. Rev. Dr. Wallace Radcliffe will officiate both at the church and at the necropolis. The funeral procession promises to be one of the most notable ever seen in the capital city. There will be a military escort, consisting of the entire strength of the Washington Light Infantry Corps, of which Col. Moore was president. The police department will march with their beloved chief to his last resting place, and it is expected that the Knights Templar will also turn out in full force. The deceased was a Mason of high degree, and a large representation from the various lodges and commanderies will be present at the obsequies. Before he became unconscious, but realizing that the end was near, Major Moore, in his last request, expressed the wish that the Washington Light Infantry should be his especial funeral escort.

Col. Moore married Miss Mary G. Rose, daughter of Dr. Benjamin Rose of Virginia. The widow and a son, Jacob G. Moore of the War Department, and a daughter, Mrs. Smoot, survive him. His two brothers, Gales Moore and Alexander Moore, were at the home this morning and will assist in arranging for the funeral.

Fight for Life
Major Moore's condition had been considered serious for a week past. His absence from duty was at first caused by an attack of malaria and stomach trouble, and it was not thought any serious illness would result.
The major had been continuously at work for several years, however, and the first symptoms of disease were quickly followed by a general break-down in his health. The complication became worse when it was discovered last Saturday that an abscess of the liver had formed.

Dr. Percy Hickling, Major Moore's family physician, then determined to call in Dr. W.W. Johnston. This was done and after a consultation it was decided that the only possible chance of saving the patient's life was to perform an operation, in the hope of locating and removing the abscess. Accordingly Saturday evening the operation was performed. There were no beneficial results, and the gallant soldier and police chief gradually grew worse.

Throughout Sunday he continued in a semi-comatose condition, those present at his bedside noticing a gradual weakening and loss of vitality. Sunday night and throughout yesterday Major Moore continued to grow worse and worse. His mind gradually became a blank; and by yesterday noon he could not recognize a member of his family. Dr. Hickling was at the house twice yesterday, but frankly said that the sick man had passed beyond all earthly assistance and that his death was a matter of but a very few hours. All that could be done was to make the last lingering hours as comfortable as possible. The delightful, cool weather, the many facilities at command and the anxious, willing and tender hands ready to administer to his every want made this an easy matter.

Long and Busy Life.
The announcement of the serious illness of Colonel William G. Moore was received with sincere regret by the general public and his death is mourned by all classes. No man identified with the interests of the national capital was more widely or prominently known. Born in this city in the year 1829, like his father before him, he has been identified with its social and business affairs since boyhood. In early life he was a companion to be sought after and a leader among his associates, among whom were Arthur P. Gorman, Samuel E. Wheatley, William B. Webb, Charles C. Duncanson and others who are now prominent in political and business circles. He was his mother's boy, fond of his home and laudable pastimes. His early education was acquired at the Rittenhouse Academy, he subsequently engaging in newspaper work, where he won considerable reputation as a reporter of congressional debates. In this line he was known for his accuracy, rapidity and style.

In the year 1857, at the instance of General Montgomery C. Meigs, young Moore accepted a position on the public works, where his talents and ability were readily appreciated.

In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the old National Rifles, which went into camp some miles out from Washington, where he received orders to report to the Secretary of War, the late Simon Cameron, to act in the capacity of his private secretary. The order making the detail read:

"Colonel Stone will direct Mr. William G. Moore of Captain Smead's company of District volunteers to report in person to the Secretary of War without delay.
(Signed)   Simon Cameron. June 1, 1861"

With that military incentive which was hereditary, Colonel Moore soon became anxious to return to his command, but the Secretary found his services too valuable to be dispensed with, and the young officer was required to remain and attend to his correspondence.

In the course of events young Moore was appointed adjutant general of volunteers, holding the rank of major with brevet rank of colonel. So diligent was he in disposing of the many important duties with which he was charged in those stirring times that he was kept continually prominent before the great men of the day.

In 1865 Colonel Moore for a brief time acted as secretary to President Lincoln and later on became private secretary to President Johnson, and the attachment which grew up between the two was like that of father and son. The President relied upon his suggestions, and he was intimate with the household at the White House.

Before leaving the Executive Mansion, President Johnson, commissioned Colonel Moore a paymaster in the army, and his assignments carried him through Kansas and the Indian territory, where he became an interesting and popular official with the rank and file of the army. Nothing afforded him more pleasure in his later years than to refer to his experiences while serving in this capacity, where he was compelled to travel by muleback and often swim flooded streams in order to reach the rendezvous.

In 1870 he became a business partner with ex-Governor Alexander R. Shepherd, and although the partnership was afterward dissolved, they remained up to the time of his death, close and intimate friends.

After going out of business Colonel Moore accepted a position in the National Metropolitan Bank, where he remained until he was appointed superintendent of the District police in 1886. During all this period he was a conspicuous officer and an acknowledged authority in military matters, being made commander of the Washington Light Infantry Corps in 1871 and colonel of the 1st Regiment of District Militia at the time of its organization a few years ago.

Superintendent of Police

In accepting the office of superintendent of police Colonel Moore took the step reluctantly. It was a case where the office sought the man, his earlier training particularly fitting him to deal with the many questions requiring extreme delicacy and diplomacy.

Upon assuming the office of superintendent of police he at once proceeded to bring about a thorough organization of the force. His military training and quick decision enabled him to master the situation and bring the force at one period to a high level. He was not only respected by all of his subordinates, but he was beloved by them, and the pleasant smile and gentle word which he had for one and all at any time will be sorely missed.

With respect to the poor and humble he was his own worst enemy, often giving from his private means on the mere representation of poverty, he fearing to injure the feelings of an applicant should he investigate the truthfulness of his statement too closely.

In the performance of duty he was fearless and courageous at all times, exhibiting a high order of judgment and discretion and an honesty of purpose in every act. Under his administration, it was his endeavor to dispose of the more unpleasant features attending the work of the police without discrimination as to creed or color, his constant idea being that business should be conducted on a high moral plane. Though not an experienced man in the detention of criminals, his selections for the work displayed marked judgment, the force under him being recognized by the various departments throughout the country as a most efficient one.

During the inaugural ceremonies he gave the entire work his personal attention, and on each occasion they were attended by thousands of participants without unpleasant incident or loss to persons and property.

Prior to the visit of Coxey's army, when all kinds of rumors were circulated as to the magnitude of the movement, Colonel Moore was the first to counsel moderation in everything. When called to the Executive Mansion, where he was consulted by the President of the United States, he gave expression to views contrary to those of others when he said, "Mr. President, I believe a course of moderation should be pursued," to which the President replied, "So do I." and the peaceful solution of the entire question at that time gave emphasis to his excellent judgment.

Colonel Moore's life was full of experiences which space will not permit to narrate at this time. He was an educated, Christian gentleman. His strong heart and iron frame were made to give way by a dread disease which could not be controlled by his physicians.

Major Moore was president and colonel of the Washington Light Infantry Corps, being one of its organizers and most enthusiastic members. The news of the financial straits in which the corps found itself when the application for receiver was recently filed caused him much worry, and if he could have willed it so he would have lived to see the famous and historic old association out of its difficulties.

The major was prominent in the military affairs of the capital before his acceptance of the superintendency of the police department. For some years after this, even, he continued active in such matters. He was a veteran of the National Rifles, and at the meetings of this old association he was the life and spirit of the occasion. A ready wit brimful of anecdotes that never failed of appreciation and possessed with a remarkable memory, he could recite incidents long since forgotten by his colleagues, but all the more enjoyably brought to mind from the fluent tongue of Major Moore.

As a member of the Masonic fraternity he was elevated to all the principal honors, being twice commander of Washington Commandery, No. 1.

When a youth, he was a recognized athlete, an experienced swimmer and acknowledged ball player and perfectly at home in a boat upon the river. As private secretary to President Johnson he accompanied that gentleman on his famous tour, which has gone down in history as "The swing around the circle," and his wonderful memory enabled him to disclose in later years memorable events and incidents which occurred in those times, and much of the history which has been contributed to the public concerning the late President Johnson and the events immediately following the war was from his wonderful store of knowledge upon the subject.

Lost a Friend.
The men in the ranks of the police department deeply appreciate the loss of Major Moore. Said a well-known private to a reporter for The Star this morning:

"All the boys realize that they have lost their best friend in the department. The major was gruff at times, but it was all over in a minute, and he was the same kind old gentleman as before. We all loved him and appreciate the many good turns he has done for us. In Major Moore we knew the kind of man we had over us and we did our best for him. Naturally the men are very anxious to learn who will be his successor. It will be many years before his memory fades from us."

The feeling is universal among the men who were thrown in contact with the major and who most willingly and heartily obeyed his every command.

To the caller at his office Major Moore always had a word of hearty greeting, and not one of his friends was allowed to depart but in a good humor at some droll story or anecdote.

Major Moore had an exciting experience at his office one day during the famous Pollard-Breckinridge case. The principals in the scandal had met at the major's, when a wordy conflict ensued and Miss Pollard drew forth a revolver and attempted to shoot the silver-tongued Kentuckian. Major Moore quickly jumped between the two irate persons and wrenched the loaded pistol from Madeline's hand, at the same time giving her a good piece of advice that she has probably not forgotten to this day.

Meeting of the Light Infantry
There will be a meeting of members, ex-members and honorary members of the Washington Light Infantry at the armory this evening to take action in regard to attending the funeral of Major Moore. Major Moore was a member of the Infantry for thirty-seven years being its commander when it was a company, a battalion and a regiment.

Words of Praise
"'Billy' Moore, as he was affectionately called by those who knew him well," said Mr. E.G. Davis, the District collector of taxes, "and I were close friends for at least forty years, I having known him ever since I came to Washington. He was a most lovable man, impulsive at times, perhaps, but never knowingly or intentionally doing anyone, no matter how humble, an injury. His was the kindest of hearts, and his death will be long and deeply mourned. As an official he was in my opinion a most valued one, and his place will be hard to fill. He was a man of real ability, of much tact, and yet most modest. As a Mason, he will be most kindly remembered, too, for he was eminent in the order, and his loss there as well as elsewhere will be a severe one."

"I cannot say too much of Major Moore," remarked Mr. Matthew Trimble, the assessor of the District, "and no one more deeply mourns him. Indeed, he was beloved by all who knew him, and his popularity was due to that lovable trait in his character which made him a friend to everyone. He made an excellent chief of police, and much of the progress of the force in recent years was due to his efforts in its behalf."

The District Commissioners directed Capt. Austin to visit the family and learn their wishes as to the funeral, but Capt. Austin stated this afternoon that, while the family had decided that the funeral shall be held at the New York Avenue Church at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, the interment to be made at the Congressional cemetery, they were undecided as to whether there shall be other than a very quiet, simple funeral, attended by no other than a detail of police officers. These matters will be decided between now and tomorrow morning. All flags on the police stations were half-masted upon Maj. Moore's death becoming known, as well as that upon the District building. Chief Parris of the fire department also ordered that flags on the houses of the fire-department be displayed at half mast.

His Successor
The Commissioners announced today that they will not consider the matter of Maj. Moore's successor until after his funeral. It is expected that there will be many applicants for the position, but the man who is most frequently mentioned in connection with the place is Mr. Richard Sylvester, , the chief clerk of the police department. He is regarded as one most competent to succeed Maj. Moore, as one thoroughly familiar, because of his long connection with the District police force, with all the duties and requirements of the position, and it is believed that his selection would meet with general approval.

Funeral Services at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church -- Military and Masonic Honors
The funeral of Colonel William G. Moore, major and superintendent of the metropolitan police, will take place tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, and the interment will be at Congressional cemetery. The dead chief will be buried with military and Masonic honors. The services at the grave will be in charge of Washington Commandery, Knights Templar, while Captain Miller's company of the Washington Light Infantry will fire a salute of three volleys at the close of the civil ceremonies.

The honorary pallbearers have been selected and will be as follows: District Commissioner John B. Wight, who is in immediate control of the police department; Mr. E.G. Davis, the District tax collector; Mr. Richard Sylvester, chief clerk of the police department; Mr. Allison Nailor and Mr. Harrison Dingman of the Washington Light Infantry, Messrs. G.H.B. White, W.P. Young and John Harrower. The active pallbearers will come from the members of the police force. The selections have not yet been made, but it is understood that the pallbearers will probably be the sergeants of the police force, one from each precinct. An escort of 128 men from the police force, in command of Captain Austin and four lieutenants, will form at Major Moore's late residence, 1710 L street northwest \, marching with the body to the church, and afterward joining in the funeral procession to Congressional cemetery.

A committee of the Union Soldiers' Alliance, of which Major Moore was a member, has been especially appointed to attend the funeral, and it is expected that a large representation will be present. The committee appointed by President Harrower consists of Dr. Frank T. Howe, Judge Chas. C. Cole, Col. U.S. Worthington and Henry E. Alvord.

The services at the house will be very simple. Dr. Radcliffe will offer prayer and then the march to the church will be made. Here the body will be met by the entire Washington Light Infantry Corps, in uniform; the National Guard Band and a large representation from Washington and other commanderies of Knights Templar. The Templars will ride in carriages. Maj. Moore was a member of Almas Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and a number of officers of this lodge will be present.

Dr. Radcliffe will conduct the services at the church and will probably make a short address. The Masonic ceremonies at the grave will be performed by Associate Prelate Albion Paris and Eminent Commander C.D. Caldwell, assisted by Past Eminent Commanders E.G. Davis, Harrison Dingman, D.G. Dixon, H.K. Simpson, Alex. H. Holt, G.H. Walker and T.P Morgan. The funeral arrangements are in charge of Undertaker Joseph Gawler.

The flags on the station houses and fire engine houses, as well as on the District building and the Washington Light Infantry Armory , are still flying at half mast in respect to the memory of Maj. Moore.

Humane Society Takes Action

A special meeting of the executive committee of the Washington Humane Society was held today to give expression to the deep sense of loss felt by the society in the death of Maj. Moore. The president, Mr. A.S. Pratt, proposed the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, setting forth: "The Washington Humane Society sincerely mourns the loss of William G. Moore, superintendent of police, one of its most valued friends, who was ever in hearty sympathy with the aim and work of the society; whose ear was ever open to the cry of distress, and his ready help extended to our officers and agents when his aid was asked to bring relief to suffering child or animal or to visit punishment upon those inflicting or responsible for such suffering.

"The society, knowing how largely it is dependent upon those who execute the law for the success of its work, realizes is great loss in the death of our honored and faithful superintendent of police."

It was ordered that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased.

Special Meeting of W.L.I. to Arrange for Funeral

A special meeting of the members of the Washington Light Infantry was held last night at the armory to take suitable action on the death of their late president, Col. William G. Moore. Major Burton R. Ross called the meeting to order, stating the sad circumstances under which the call has been made. He paid a tribute to the memory of Col. Moore, who, he said, had been prominently connected with the corps for many years, and whose last request, almost, was that he should be buried under an escort from the organization.

Lieutenant A.A. Birney was appointed chairman of a committee to draft suitable resolutions and a committee on floral tribute was also appointed. It was decided that as far as possible the corps shall march at the funeral in their white uniforms, those not being fully equipped with this style of dress to form separate companies uniformed in regular army style. The National Guard Brigade Band under the direction of Mr. Donald McLeod will march with the funeral procession. At the grave a salute of three rounds will be fired over the last resting place of the dead soldier, and taps will be sounded by the buglers.

A Warning to Col. Moore

Col. Wm. G. Moore is still at the head of the police department, and this morning when a Star reporter called he was sitting at his desk transacting business as usual. He did not appear badly frightened, nor was he nervous, notwithstanding the presence of a postal card on his death, on which was sketched what was intended to represent a skull and crossbones. On the postal was written:

"Sir:  If President Harrison don't move you, I will.
Yours until death,
Member of the C.P.L.

"Beware, your days are numbered."  "True until death" were the words written about the skull and crossbones representation.

The postal was received Saturday afternoon, and the address on the postal was:
"Major Moore,
"City."

Col. Moore had nothing to say about the postal other than to ask if he looked like he was frightened.

Locals

Major William G. Moore who has been feeling unwell for several days is expected to be out when the weather is more favorable.

Moore, a War Department clerk, attended the inquest of Booth aboard the USS Montauk. The purpose of the inquest was to have Booth's body positively identified. Historians have noted that witnesses had different opinions about Booth's body. India-ink initials tattooed on his hand as a boy and a surgical scar on the back of his neck served as positive identifiers. To this day, there is controversy surrounding the positive identification of Lincoln's assassin.

Death of Capt. W.W. Moore,
A Sketch of His Useful and Honorable Career

Captain William Walker Moore, whose serious illness has been mentioned in The Star, died at the family residence, 13th and F streets northwest at 8:25 o'clock this morning, within five weeks of his 84th birthday. Captain Moore, up to a few years ago, enjoyed remarkably good health, seldom having lost a day from business in his active and useful life. About two weeks ago he suffered an attack of paralysis, from which he was unable to rally. On Tuesday morning he became unconscious and continued so to the end.

Captain Moore was born January 28th, 1803, on the Manokin river, some twenty miles from Princess Anne, Somerset county, on the eastern shore of Maryland. His father was John B. Moore, son of Elijah Moore, who died January 29th 1791, and his mother was Sally Bowen, whose parents resided in the same county. The family moved from Somerset county to Baltimore in 1807, and the father, being a contractor and builder, did considerable work in that city. Afterwards he received the appointment of lumber inspector from the governor, and filled that position for some years. When 16 years of age the deceased was indentured to the printers' business with General Benjamin Eades, editor and proprietor of the Baltimore Republican, then published at the corner of 2d and Gay streets. General Eades shortly afterwards sold out the paper and removed his job office to the corner of Baltimore and South streets, and Mr. Moore remained with him until his majority. He displayed such aptness for the business that General Eades, before he was free, placed him in charge of the establishment and gave him a seat at the family table, removing him from that at which the other apprentices ate. Captain Moore was married in Baltimore, June 13th, 1825, to Lucinda Ann Depass, who died on the 15th of August last. February 1st, 1829, Captain Moore came to this city and took charge of the printing office of General Duff Green. He remained with him until 1834, when he resigned and opened a job printing office on Pennsylvania avenue, but in a short time gave it up, and returned to General Green, took charge of his office on Capitol Hill and wound up his business for him. Captain Moore then moved back to Baltimore with his family, and with General Green started The Merchant, a newspaper which was not successful.

In 1838 Captain Moore returned with his family to this city and took charge of the paper department of the "National Intelligencer," then published by Gales & Seaton and remained as the managing editor until January 1st, 1865, a period of over twenty-six years. He was then offered the position of secretary and treasurer of the Metropolitan Railroad company, of this city and filled that position up to the day of his death.

Captain Moore came from a military family. His uncle, John Bowen, was a midshipman of the navy attached to Commodore Barney's flotilla in the Chesapeake Bay in the War of 1812. After the flotilla was blown up he participated in the skirmish at Bladensburg, and was one of the officers in charge of the water battery at the bombardment of Fort McHenry. After the repulse of the British, Capt. Moore was enrolled in a company of youths to prepare ammunition and to repel a second attack. When about eighteen years of age, he was appointed an ensign in Col. Eades' regiment of Maryland militia, and afterwards a captain by the governor of the state. Subsequently he commanded the Howard Volunteers of Baltimore. After he came here he was elected captain of the National Cadets, a company in existence prior to the organization of the Washington Light Infantry, commanded by Col. W.G. Moore, the oldest son of the deceased.

Always taking an interest in public affairs, Capt. Moore was induced in 1857 to run as a candidate for the board of aldermen of Washington city from the 4th ward in which he resided, and he was elected and filled the position with so much ability that he was re-elected for several subsequent terms. He also served several terms in the board of common council, a number of them as presiding officer. When, in 1871, the District government was changed he was at once elected a member of the house of delegates of the District legislature.

Capt. Moore became an Odd Fellow in September 1822, and at once took an active interest in the order. He almost from the first saw the advantage of the order having a home here and was one of the leaders in the project of purchasing a site and meeting hall. He was one of the building committee of the hall on 7th street and held the position of president of the board of trustees for several years, and was the chairman of the building committee, and as such purchased the ground and managed the property. He was elected representative to the Grand Lodge of the United States over forty years ago, and was nominated for the position of Grand Sire several times and declined. In 1830 he was elected to that position and filled it very acceptably. In 1843, as one of the members of the division of the work, he rendered valuable service and was the author of a Digest of the Laws of the Order.

Capt. Moore over forty years ago became attached to the Fourth Presbyterian church with his family and had been a communicant thereof for many years. In antebellum days, through his management of the National Intelligencer, he was brought into contact with nearly all of the leading men of the country and had the personal friendship of many of them.

He was the father of twelve children, eight of whom grew up to majority and married, and six of these survive him: Mrs. B.M. Campbell of Fauquier county Va.; Col. W.G. Moore and Mrs. Dr. D. McFarlan, of this city; Rev. Alexander D. Moore, pastor of the 1st Presbyterian church of Bethlehem, Pa.; Mrs. E.M. Nourse, whose husband recently deceased, and Mr. J. Gales Moore, of the National Metropolitan Bank.

The deceased, by his probity of character and courteous manners, won the respect and esteem of all with whom he came in contact.

It has been the custom when a past grand sire of Odd Fellows dies to summons all the principal officers of the grand lodge to arrange for the funeral. This will be done in the case of Past Grand Sire Moore.

The several branches of the Order of Odd Fellows, of which deceased was a member, will meet this evening for the purpose of making arrangements for attending the funeral.

The Funeral of Capt. W.W. Moore

The funeral of the late Capt. W.W. Moore took place at noon Saturday from his home, 600 F street northwest. Rev. Joseph T. Kelly, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church and Rev. John MacLane conducted the services. Mr. Kelly made an address. The honorary pall bearers were John W. Thompson, George W. Pearson, Henry Polkinhorn, James Fraser, Robert S. Joran and Charles P. Wannell. The active pall bearers were selected from the Odd Fellows organizations and were Oliver Dutour, of the Grand Encampment; J.T. Petty, Grand Lodge; James H. Richards, Grand Canton; John Thaw, board of trustees; John H. Seiffert, Columbian Encampment, and W.H. Richards, Central Lodge. The remains were interred in the Congressional cemetery. The attendance at the services was large and included representatives of all the Odd Fellows bodies of the city, members of the Oldest Inhabitants' association and a large number of prominent citizens.

Services Held for Mrs. Alice Lee Moque

Funeral Oration and Music for Deceased Were Prepared by Herself

In compliance with a wish to which she had frequently given expression during her lifetime, funeral service for Mrs. Alice Lee Moque, prominent in the suffrage movement and literary and women's work in Washington, who died Wednesday at her home in the Savoy, will consist of a service of music and an oration prepared by herself. The service will be held this afternoon at Lee's crematory, at 5 o'clock and the body will be cremated. She was a firm believer in cremation and at her request her body will be so disposed of.

Mrs. Moque recently broke a leg and was recovering from her injury when she suffered an attack of heart disease, which resulted in her death. She had traveled extensively, particularly in the Balkans, and accounts of her travels were published in local papers and in book form under the title, "Beautiful Dalmatia."

She was the first woman to address members of the American Medical Association at one of its annual conventions and she had contributed articles to medical and other publications. She was a former vice president of the Mothers' Congress, a member of the American Penwomen, Authors' Guild, and held membership in and was recently awarded a medal by the Societe Academique D'Historie internationale. During the war she was active in the work of the Women's Volunteer Aid of the Motor Corps.

She was born in New Orleans and is survived by her husband, John Oliver Moque; two sons, Dr. Walter O. Snelling of Allentown, Pa., and Henry Snelling of Washington, and a daughter, Voleta Alice Moque, also of this city.

Services Over Remains of Late George N. Moran
The remains of George N. Moran, a former trooper in the 24th Virginia Cavalry, confederate army, will be placed in their last resting place tomorrow afternoon. Funeral services will be held at his late residence, 739 13th street southeast, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Moran was in his sixty-first year, and died after an illness of fifteen months. He was born in Richmond in 1844. He enlisted in the 24th Virginia Cavalry at the age of seventeen, and served with that regiment throughout the war. After peace was declared he went to Richmond and lent his energies to the rehabilitation of the confederate capital due to the ravages of the conflict. While thus engaged he acquired considerable knowledge of building. A few years later he went to Baltimore, where he served his apprenticeship as a bricklayer.

He married Miss Alice Rowe of Fredericksburg, Va., in 1869. Five years later he went back to Richmond for two years. In 1875 he came to Washington, where he resided until his death. Mr. Moran worked first as a journeyman bricklayer, but later, in partnership with Henry Eno of Anacostia, he built the Eastern High School and the Towers School. About twelve years ago this partnership was dissolved and Mr. Moran again worked as a journeyman. He is survived by a widow and six children.

Death has claimed our darling father,
Set a seal upon his brow;
In the arms of our dear Savior
He is gently sleeping now.

Afflictions sore long time he bore,
Physicians were in vain;
Till Christ the Chief came to his relief
And eased him of his pain.

Loved by many, but most by God,
Him who knows what is best,
Who has taken our loved one away
To His home of peace and rest.

An Attempted Suicide
Miss Lottie Moran Turns on the Gas at the Belvedere, but May Recover

"Mrs. Morgan, Baltimore," was registered by a sad-faced woman in black, who appeared at the Belvedere Hotel Tuesday evening about 10 o'clock. There was nothing about the woman to indicate that there was anything the matter with her mind or that she was other than a woman who had just reached the city on a train, and the clerk assigned her to one of the nicest rooms in the house, she paying her bill in advance.

Yesterday morning nothing was seen of the woman, but there was a smell of gas coming from the room she occupied. The persons employed about the hotel were unable to locate the place from where the gas was escaping, and it was not until late yesterday afternoon that Mr. Hoadley, the proprietor, discovered that it was escaping from the room occupied by the supposed Baltimore woman. Then he looked over the transom and saw what appeared to be the dead form of the woman stretched upon the bed. The door was unlocked and faint signs of life in the woman's body were visible. She was unconscious and unable to move.
Found Unconscious
The windows were opened to give the patient plenty of fresh air and Dr. Percy Hickling was soon at her side. He labored to restore the woman to consciousness and save her life, and this afternoon, while the patient was still unconscious, she was able to open her eyes.

The housekeeper of the hotel remained at her side all night, and in looking over her clothing found upon it the name of "L. Moran."

Missing From Her Home
Soon after the woman was found in an unconscious condition the police were notified, and they had received word to look out for Miss Lottie Moran, who left her home, No. 1146 8th street northwest, Tuesday. The patient resembled the description given of Miss Moran, who was missing, and the name on the underclothing confirmed the suspicion that she was the woman for whom the police were looking. Last evening relatives of the would-be suicide called at the hotel and told the proprietor that Miss Moran had recently been furloughed from the insane asylum for the purpose of visiting friends, and nothing wrong was suspected until she disappeared from home Tuesday, and then they were afraid that she had taken her life.

Late this afternoon the patient was still in an unconscious condition, although it was thought that her chances for recovery were favorable.

<td>Commodore Morgan entered the Navy in 1808, and was excelled in courage and activity by no one of the brave young spirits who bore a part in the glorious naval actions of the war of 1812-15. Though very young, he distinguished himself in the action between the United States frigate Constitution, and his Britannic Majesty's frigate Guerrier, the most important naval engagement during the war. Twice appointed to command the United States naval forces in the Mediterranean, he discharged his duty in these important trusts with honor to himself and advantage to his country. He governed those under his orders not by operating on their fears, but by well-directed efforts to elevate them in their own estimation, by reasonable indulgences, and the dispensation of equal justice.</td>

Commodore Morgan was a native of Virginia, a nephew of his illustrious namesake, the brave Gen. Morgan, of the Revolutionary army; and in all the qualities of a gallant and noble officer and gentleman, he was worthy of his blood and of his chivalric profession. He has left a devoted wife and two sons to mourn his loss, and, as he was esteemed and respected by all who knew him, his death will be lamented by all with whom he ever served, from the highest to the humblest.

The Death of the Late E.C. Morgan

At 2 o'clock this afternoon, after proceedings in the Surrat case (John Surratt) had been suspended, a meeting of the legal fraternity was held in the courtroom, to take action in reference to the death of the late Edwin C. Morgan, which was generally attended.

The meeting was called to order by District Attorney Carrington, on whose motion Mr. Joseph H. Bradley was called to the chair, and Mr. W.F. Mattingly appointed secretary.

Mr. Bradley briefly stated the object of the meeting to be to take action in reference to the death of one who over twenty years ago had been admitted to the bar -- a man of high character, honest, upright and faithful -- and who, during that time, was highly esteemed by all with whom he associated.

Mr. Norris moved that a committee of seven be appointed to draft suitable resolutions in respect to the memory of the deceased, which was agreed to, and the following were appointed: Mr. Norris, Judge Andrew Wylie, Judge G.P. Fisher, Messrs. R.R. Eindall, James M. Carlisle, W.D. Davidge, and E.C. Carrington.

On the return of the committee, Mr. Carlisle addressed the meeting, referring to the fact that it was more than four years since his voice was heard here, and it seemed to him the more fitting that it should be heard on this occasion. It happened during this period, because of neighborhood, that he had been in almost daily intercourse with two members of the bar -- Stone and Morgan. He felt like a man who had lost a friend on the right, and one on the left. These two men were in some things entirely alike, and in others, totally dissimilar -- one, a close reader of the law as laid down in the books, and the other impatient of the law. They were both honorable men. It seemed that with Mr. Morgan nature had fitted him for distinction at the bar, and he believed that no man ever, in the dust of the forum, failed to be impressed with his ennobling qualities. Mr. Norris read the following preamble and resolutions:

On the afternoon of Monday, the 27th inst., Edwin Cecil Morgan died at his residence, in this city, in the bosom of his own immediate family, surrounded by a large connection, to whom he was endeared not only by the ties of blood and affinity, but by all the qualities that strengthen and intensify the common bonds of nature. Beyond that immediate circle, the hearts of many friends, and especially of his brethren now here assembled, were filled with sorrow as the intelligence spread among them that they should see his face no more. He had completed his 40th year and in the pride of ripened manhood, when as yet no blight of autumn had fallen upon him, the grave untimely opened and received him. But though his feet shall tread in the accustomed path no more, and though his voice shall never more be heard on earth, we, his brethren, will cherish his memory with affectionate respect, and keep alive the recollection of his clear and vigorous mind, his manly, natural eloquence, his quick intuitive sense of right, his abhorrence of all things mean and low, his unsullied honor, his frank and generous temper.

Resolved therefore, That this expression of our affection for our deceased brother, and of our sincere sorrow for his untimely death be by the chairman of this meeting laid before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at its next general term, with a request that these proceedings be entered upon the minutes of the court.

Resolved further, That a copy of these proceedings be communicated by the chairman to the family of the deceseed, with the respectful assurance of heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved further, That the newspapers of the city be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

Mr. Norris, Gen. Carrington and Mr. J.S. Williams spoke feelingly of the life and character of the deceased, the resolutions were adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

On the northeast corner of Third and D Streets, with entrance on Third, there is a house which has not changed, excepting as to the entrance, since it was built by the late D. Wesley Middleton in 1831. It was his home prior to 1851 or 1852 and my father was the next occupant until 185, when Mr. Edwin Cecil Morgan rented the house and continued his residence there until his death in July, 1867.

Mr. Morgan, whose nephew, Dr. James Dudley Morgan, is so well known to this Society and in the medical profession, was born in this city, February 9, 1827, and at the time of his death, had been a prominent member of the District bar for several years. His office was in one of two small buildings which adjoined the old Fendall home and the site is now a part of the Fendall building. After Mr. Morgan's widow vacated this house in August, 1867, Mrs. Dr. Skillman, a daughter of Mr. Middleton's became the occupant.

Commodore C.W. Morgan died yesterday morning at his residence in the Navy Yard of which place he was in command. In some of the most sanguinary actions during the last war with England, Commodore Morgan was distinguished by his bravery. He has been forty-five years in the service of his country, and died respected and esteemed by all who knew him. The flags on the United States steamers in the river, and those at the Navy Yard and the Garrison were half-masted, and orders issued by the Department for the observance of the usual testimonials of respect. Commodore M. was buried this afternoon from his late residence at three o'clock.

The National Intelligencer, January 6, 1853
Death of Commodore Morgan
It is with painful regret that we have to announce the death of the gallant and veteran Commodore Charles W. Morgan, of the United States Navy. He expired at his official residence, in command of the Washington Navy Yard, yesterday morning, after a lingering and painful illness, aged sixty three years.

Commodore Morgan entered the Navy in 1808, and was excelled in courage and activity by no one of the brave young spirits who bore a part in the glorious naval actions of the war of 1812-15. Though very young, he distinguished himself in the action between the United States frigate Constitution, and his Britannic Majesty's frigate Guerrier, the most important naval engagement during the war. Twice appointed to command the United States naval forces in the Mediterranean, he discharged his duty in these important trusts with honor to himself and advantage to his country. He governed those under his orders not by operating on their fears, but by well-directed efforts to elevate them in their own estimation, by reasonable indulgences, and the dispensation of equal justice.
Commodore Morgan was a native of Virginia, a nephew of his illustrious namesake, the brave Gen. Morgan, of the Revolutionary army; and in all the qualities of a gallant and noble officer and gentleman, he was worthy of his blood and of his chivalric profession. He has left a devoted wife and two sons to mourn his loss, and, as he was esteemed and respected by all who knew him, his death will be lamented by all with whom he ever served, from the highest to the humblest.

The Funeral of the late Commodore Morgan will take place this afternoon from the Navy Yard, at half past 3 o'clock precisely. The following officers will act as pallbearers:

- Com. Shubrick
- Com. Skinner
- Com. Smith
- Capt. Montgomery
- Com. Shubrick
- Gen. Henderson, M.C.
- Capt. Terrett, M.C.
- Gen. Totten
- Col. Albert

The Evening Star, January 7, 1853

The Funeral of Commodore Morgan took place yesterday afternoon at the appointed hour, from his late residence at the Navy Yard, with the usual honors. Minute guns were fired during the passage of the body to the Congress burial ground. A strong corps of Marines escorted the remains, which were also attended by the officers of the Navy and Marine corps. The pallbearers consisted of the officers named in yesterday’s paper.

Very ill -- Mr. E.C. Morgan of the Washington bar is very ill at his residence, corner of 3d and D streets, of typhoid fever. His attending physicians, Drs. J.E. Morgan, Johnson, Elliott and J.C. Hall have but little hopes of his recovery. Mr. Morgan was first taken with congestion of the bowels but the disease has now turned to typhoid and he is very low.

The Evening Star, July 30, 1867

The Death of E.C. Morgan, Esq.

Edwin C. Morgan, Esq., for the past twenty years a much esteemed member of the Washington bar, died at his residence, corner of 3d and D streets, yesterday afternoon, after a short illness of typhoid fever, in the 41st year of his age. Mr. Morgan was admitted to the bar on the 19th of December, 1846, and has always enjoyed the confidence and esteem of his brother members. He leaves a widow, and two sons aged 8 and 12 years.

The funeral took place this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, and was attended by a large number of relatives and friends and members of the bar. The remains were conveyed to the Congressional Cemetery, the following named gentlemen acting as pall-bearers: Joseph H. Bradley, Sr., James W. Carlisle, Dr. John B. Blake, John J. Johnson, James R. Roach, Jno. E. Norris, John VanRiswick and E.J. Middleton. A few months since Mr. Morgan had his life insured for $5,000.

The members of the bar in this City meet at the City Hall tomorrow afternoon to take appropriate action in reference to the death of Mr. Morgan.

On the afternoon of Monday, the 27th inst., Edwin Cecil Morgan died at his residence, in this city, in the bosom of his own immediate family, surrounded by a large connection, to whom he was endeared not only by the ties of blood and affinity, but by all the qualities that strengthen and intensify the common bonds of nature. Beyond that immediate circle, the hearts of many friends, and especially of his brethren now here assembled, were filled with sorrow as the intelligence spread among them that they should see his face no more. He had completed his 40th year and in the pride of ripened manhood, when as yet no blight of autumn had fallen upon him, the grave untimely opened and received him. But though his feet shall tread in the accustomed path no more, and though his voice shall never more be heard on earth, we, his brethren, will cherish his memory with affectionate respect, and keep alive the recollection of his clear and vigorous mind.
his manly, natural eloquence, his quick intuitive sense of right, his abhorrence of all things mean and low, his unsullied honor, his frank and generous temper.

Resolved therefore, That this expression of our affection for our deceased brother, and of our sincere sorrow for his untimely death be by the chairman of this meeting laid before the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia at its next general term, with a request that these proceedings be entered upon the minutes of the court.

Resolved further, That a copy of these proceedings be communicated by the chairman to the family of the deceased, with the respectful assurance of heartfelt sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved further, That the newspapers of the city be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

Mr. Norris, Gen. Carrington and Mr. J.S. Williams spoke feelingly of the life and character of the deceased, the resolutions were adopted, and the meeting adjourned.

On the northeast corner of Third and D Streets, with entrance on Third, there is a house which has not changed, excepting as to the entrance, since it was built by the late D. Wesley Middleton in 1831. It was his home prior to 1851 or 1852 and my father was the next occupant until 185, when Mr. Edwin Cecil Morgan rented the house and continued his residence there until his death in July, 1867.

Mr. Morgan, whose nephew, Dr. James Dudley Morgan, is so well known to this Society and in the medical profession, was born in this city, February 9, 1827, and at the time of his death, had been a prominent member of the District bar for several years. His office was in one of two small buildings which adjoined the old Fendall home and the site is now a part of the Fendall building. After Mr. Morgan's widow vacated this house in August, 1867, Mrs. Dr. Skillman, a daughter of Mr. Middleton's became the occupant.

Death of Capt. Richard Morgan
Capt. Richard Morgan died at his residence, 204 9th street southwest, Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Capt. Morgan was 64 years old and had been a resident of this city for many years. For a number of years he was superintendent of the stone work at the Capitol. At the breaking out of the war he raised a company composed largely of men who had worked under him and was mustered into service as its captain. In 1867 he, with nine others, formed Kit Carson post of the G.A.R., of which he has always been an active member. He was the last but one of the charter members. He was well known and popular in the eastern section of the city and for a time represented his ward in the city councils. His funeral will take place from his late residence Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock and will be largely attended by members of the Grand Army.

Aged Artist Evicted

Mrs. Imogen Robinson Morrell a Subject of Sympathy

Mrs. Imogene Robinson Morrell, the aged artist, who has made her home in this city for many years, was evicted yesterday for non-payment of rent from the premises she has been occupying at No. 714 19th street northwest. This action was the result of proceedings instituted by Samuel T. Stott of No. 505 Pennsylvania avenue, who owns the property.

When the constables reached the house yesterday the door was barred, and upon Mrs. Morrell declining to open it they entered through a cellar window and removed the occupant's belongings, including some furniture and pictures, to the sidewalk.

The proceedings attracted a crowd, including several friends of Mrs. Morrell living in the neighborhood, and the latter came to her assistance. Mrs. Elizabeth Herring of 1905 F street had a quantity of the furniture moved into her house for safe keeping, and Col. Rosecrans of the army offered Mrs. Morrell a home with his family, at 706 19th street.

In the fire which destroyed the Knox warehouse several years ago Mrs. Morrell lost a number of pictures she had painted, and entered suit for $180,000 damages alleged to have been incurred by their loss. She compromised the suit, it is understood, for the sum of $2,000. Her works were mostly large canvases. She is a native of Massachusetts and studied art abroad. She was married to Abram Morrell, a Virginian, in Paris in 1870, and came to this country a few years later. A portrait of Gen. Dix, painted by her, hangs in the Senate wing of the Capitol.

Mrs. Morrell has received many expressions of sympathy in her misfortune, and her friends are making arrangements to prevent such an unpleasant experience in the future.

Morrison. At his lodgings in this city, yesterday, Colonel James Morrison, of Kentucky, a gentleman of high character for probity and patriotism. [A more particular notice of his life and public usefulness will be hereafter given.]

The National Intelligencer, July 16, 1823

The following is an extract from the will of the late Col. James Morrison, of Lexington, Kentucky, by which he bequeathed so liberal a donation to the University of that State.

"I give to the trustees of the Transylvania University and their successors the sum of twenty thousand dollars in trust, to vest the capital in some permanent productive fund, and out of the annual interest or dividends accruing thereon to pay the salary of a professorship to be instituted by them and to be denominated the "Morrison Professorship," or to apply the said twenty thousand dollars to the purchase of a Library, to be denominated the "Morrison Library," as the said Trustees may think will best promote the interest of learning and science.

"And all my residuary estate beyond the sum of eleven thousand dollars, I give and devise to the Trustees of the Transylvania University for the benefit of that institution to be applied to the erection of another edifice for its purposes, to be denominated "Morrison College," in the town of Lexington."

The National Intelligencer, August 11, 1823

The Late Col. Morrison

In announcing, not long since, the death of Colonel James Morrison, of Kentucky, we suggested that a more copious notice of the deceased would probably hereafter appear. The delineation of Col. Morrison's life and character, which has recently been published in the form of an admirable discourse, delivered in Lexington, Kentucky, by President Holley, of the Transylvania University, is so complete, that the following abridgment, by the hand of a friend of the editors of some passages of the work, cannot but be gratifying to many of our readers:

Col. James Morrison, the son of a poor but worthy and respectable emigrant from Ireland, was born in the year 1755, in the county of Cumberland, in Pennsylvania. He continued with his father in the usual employment of agriculture, till towards the close of his minority. He entered early into the service of his country, and was for several years a soldier in the war of the Revolution. He was one of the select corps of riflemen that made itself so formidable to our enemies, under the command of the celebrated Col. Morgan. He was in those hard fought battles near Saratoga, which, terminating in victory, caused the capture of Burgoyne and his whole army. On one occasion, in the autumn of that memorable year, this rifle corps fought nearly the whole day--so that before sunset, so obstinate and sharp was the combat, the field was four times taken and re-taken. Tradition, which yet supplies the absence of the written truth, recounting the deeds of this immortal band, assigns to Morrison an ample share in its hardships, merits, dangers, and triumphs. With the fatigues and privations of a hunter's life, also, he was afterwards familiar; and in such career, when savage hostilities ensued, Morrison's signal bravery and self possession often enabled him to baffle or surpass the stratagems and surprises of Indian warfare. After peace became established, and the United States assumed their high rank among nations, Morrison having settled himself at Pittsburg, in his native state, became the first sheriff of the County of Alleghany. Here he continued to reside for several years, distinguished for his social virtues by a wide circle of admiring friends. During this period, he was married in his native county at Carlisle: and soon afterwards he formed and executed the determination of removing to Kentucky. In 1792 he entered into business as a merchant in the town of Lexington, and here met with that success which crowned all the subsequent acts of his life. In 1795 he was appointed by Governor Shelby Commissioner for assigning lands to the settlers south of Green River. In 1797 he was elected in Fayette County a Representative to the Legislature. Soon after this, he was appointed supervisor of the United States revenue for the district of Kentucky. From that time to a recent period, and more especially during the war of 1812 he has been successively engaged, chiefly by the National Executive, in offices both of trust and profit, extensive and highly responsible; all of which Col. Morrison has executed with unspotted integrity and uncommon success. The last situation, however, which he filled, was of a different nature from any of the former. He was appointed Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the young but flourishing University of Transylvania. To the peculiar duties of this new office, and the advancement of this excellent institution, when it was in its infancy but feebly supported, he applied all the energies of his sound and seasoned mind. And, while engaged in this most laudable service, he seemed insensible to bodily infirmities--and to know neither repose or fatigue. The University of Transylvania, thus cherished like an adopted favorite child, was not forgotten in his will, but has been recognized and honored as his most distinguished legatee. He correctly felt that the chief value of truth, liberty, humanity, religion, and immortality, depends on a well directed education; on a rational and moral formation of character; on the illumination and improvement of the mind; and that, without this, they would be unable to bestow that diversified and perfect happiness which is requisite to satisfy the inexhaustible and ever-expanding faculties of the soul.

As it was destined that he should die at a distance from his own town and home, he could not have chosen, had the privilege been allowed to him, a more appropriate place; one more gratifying to his patriotism, or to his laudable regard to his name and his character, than the City of Washington. There his ashes sleep, near to the sepulcher of the Father of his Country, and on the very spot where that great man fixed the seat of Empire. So few of our Revolutionary worthies are now to be found in the walks of our busy and protected life of domestic pursuits; and so numerous and unquestioned are the fruits of the wisdom and labors of the generation that made us free and independent, that the halo around every useful man of that glorious day, becomes peculiarly bright and far-darting--and while it catches all eyes, assembles about the possessor respectful, admiring and sympathetic friends. This charm, as might be expected, surrounded Morrison in his last sickness. He was an old and intimate friend of our excellent Chief Magistrate, and could claim, as he received, every courtesy and delicate as well as faithful service at his hands. In addition to this, he had the cordial and devoted attentions of his friend, an eminent counselor, and distinguished statesman, H. Clay, Esq. his confidential and constant adviser--one who, knowing the thoughts of his mind, and the wishes of his heart, could administer more varied and effectual consolation, than perhaps any other individual, if we except his faithful and affectionate wife, who fortunately arrived in Washington several days before his dissolution. But the prescribed limits of the Intelligencer admonish us to sum up the character of this Revolutionary patriot abruptly: As he was bountiful and amiable we loved him; as he was industrious, intelligent, useful and successful, we respected him--as he was hospitable and generous, we applauded him--as he was philanthropic and munificent, we admired him--as he was honest, candid, faithful and religious, we revered him--as he was our friend and benefactor, the patron of learning, the supporter of good morals, the defender of sound principles, and the advocate of every valuable measure, we will gratefully remember him, and embalm his name with the virtuous.

Of Lexington, Kentucky, died in Washington, D.C., April 23, 1823. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and Heitman registers him as an ensign, Eighth Pennsylvania from 21st of December, 1778, until he retired January 1, 1781. Colonel Morrison settled in Lexington, Kentucky, in 1792, and became a man of great wealth and founder of Morrison College in Lexington. He was state representative from Fayette and Quartermaster-General. The only record on his monument of military service is the title "Colonel".

Barber Kills Himself

Louis M. Morrison Inhaled Gas in His Shop -- No Known Troubles
Louis M. Morrison, twenty three years of age, known as "Mike" to friends in Southeast Washington, where he conducted a barber shop, was the first to commit suicide in Washington this year.

His body was found in his shop, 653 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, early yesterday morning by Policeman Romer. A gas tube extending from a water heater to the mouth of the dead man was enough to show that death had not resulted from accident.

Coroner Nevitt made an investigation later in the day. He gave a certificate showing that death had resulted from poisoning by gas inhaled with suicidal intent.

Morrison, married only three years lived at 1105 South Carolina avenue. The southeast largely patronized his shop.

Saturday night, Morrison told his assistants that he was going to be away for a short while. He failed to return, but no particular attention was paid to his absence.

It is believed he returned to the shop after midnight, and made quick work of his effort to end his life. When Policeman Romer discovered something wrong in the shop he sent a hurried call to the Casualty Hospital. The physician who responded found life extinct.

The police were unable to determine why Morrison had taken his life. He had never, his friends say, shown signs of despondency.
Morrison is survived by his wife and son. His parents and two brothers live at 405 10th street southeast. This morning the body was removed to the South Carolina avenue house and arrangements made for the funeral.

Woman Fatally Burned

Fatal Results of an Explosion of Coal Oil

Mrs. Annie Morse, thirty-five years old, wife of Austin Morse, a laborer, was fatally burned this morning while using coal oil to start a fire. The affair occurred at the home of the Morse family, No. 537 4th street southeast, about 8 o'clock. Mrs. Morse was taken to Providence Hospital where she died at 11:35 o'clock. William Bohannon, who conducts a grocery store at No. 735 4th street, and who went to the rescue of Mrs. Morse, was painfully burned about the hands and head.

At the time the fatal accident occurred Mrs. Morse was alone in the house, her husband having gone to work. She was in a hurry to get a hot fire in order to do some cooking, and for this purpose used the oil on the already burning wood. As soon as the oil came in contact with the flames there was an explosion. The flames, which almost filled the kitchen, enveloped the woman and her dress was soon afire. She fought the flames the best she could, but her efforts did not have much effect. Her screams attracted the attention of neighbors, and Mr. Bohannon was the first to go to her assistance, and did his best to save the woman's life. The flames were finally extinguished, but Mrs. Morse was in a dying condition.

Many neighbors responded to her cries, and she was made as comfortable as possible until the arrival of the patrol wagon from the fifth police station. She was placed in the vehicle and hurried to Providence Hospital, but upon her arrival at the hospital the doctors stated that her life could not be saved, although they did what they could for her relief.

Acting Coroner Glazebrook gave a certificate of accidental death, and the body was placed in charge of the dead woman's husband. Arrangements for the funeral will not be perfected until tonight.

Suicide

Tuesday afternoon a man named Jules Mostigneal was found lying dead in the Smithsonian grounds. A pistol shot wound in the forehead, the pistol lying beside him, and a letter in his pocket addressed to Antonius Merle, No. 295 Penn's avenue, afforded evidence that the deceased had committed suicide, and the jury of inquest returned a verdict accordingly. From the letter addressed to Mr. Merle it was apparent that pecuniary embarrassment was the cause of the act.

Moulder, John Nicholson

Moulder. On Monday the 7th instant after an illness of several weeks, John N. Moulder, Esq., chief clerk in the office of the 2nd Comptroller of the Treasury. His friends and acquaintances are invited to attend his funeral at 12 o'clock on Thursday next, the 10th instant, from his late residence on Pennsylvania avenue near the Capitol.

Kenton N. Harper, History of the Grand Lodge and of Freemasonry in D.C., 1911

Moulder -- Grand Master, 1826-27, 1830, 1832, 1838

Brother Moulder was born in Philadelphia, Pa., in May, 1792, and was a grandson of John Nicholson, an associate and friend of Robert Morris, of Revolutionary fame. He was a man of unusual intellectual attainments, a public-spirited citizen, a valued officer in the Federal and local municipal government, and as a Mason gave to this jurisdiction without stint for many years the best of his talents.

In his early manhood he conducted a school in Philadelphia, but spent the greater part of his life in Washington as a resident of the old First Ward, having his home on I between 21st and 22d Streets, N.W., but later moved to the Third Ward and lived on the east side of 9th between I Street and New York Avenue.

In the government service he held for many years a responsible position in the office of the Second Comptroller, and was Comptroller of the Currency under President Andrew Jackson, who was a personal friend. In his capacity as a citizen of Washington he served as Alderman in the First Ward from 1817 to 1819, and again in 1825 and 1826, was also at one time a member of the Board of Common Council, was for a number of years a Justice of the Peace, and was President of the Union Fire Company in its early days.

Originally a member of Columbia Lodge, No. 3, of this jurisdiction, he filled the station of Master there from 1821 to 1827, inclusive, and in December, 1825, was elected to the Grand East without previous service in any of the subordinate offices of that body. During his second term in 1827, he granted a dispensation for the formation of Hiram Lodge, and in 1828 withdrew from Columbia, entered the former lodge and was immediately called to the East in that body. Subsequently, as stated above, he served for four more years as Grand Master.

During the first year of his incumbency (1826) of that office he laid the cornerstone of the first Masonic Temple ever erected in Washington in which the Grand Lodge was actively interested, the building on the southwest corner of Indiana Avenue and John Marshall Place, which is still standing, and the history of which is given in detail in other pages of this work.

On this notable occasion he delivered an address which is a model in its class and may be found in the Grand Lodge Proceedings for the year 1826.

He was a member of Washington R.A. Chapter, No. 1, and served that body for two terms as High Priest.

From a letter of condolence, written by a committee of Washington Chapter, to the widow of Brother Moulder, and dated January 18, 1839, we quote the following extract: For upwards of twenty years our friend and Companion John N. Moulder, Esq., was connected with the Order of Free Masonry in this city, and for a considerable portion of that time was a distinguished officer and member of this Chapter (having twice been elected to the office of Most Excellent High Priest). We, Madam, knew him well, and improve this opportunity to bear cheerful testimony to his kind and courteous manner, the dignity with which he presided over the Craft, the avidity with which he voted favorably on every case of distress, and the haste which sped his willing feet, by day or night, to relieve the wants of the suffering. These were characteristics in John N. Moulder which never can be erased from the memory of his Companions.

That his private life was above reproach is shown by a communication from Brig. Gen. John M. Wilson, U.S.A., retired, a grandson, who, while never having seen his grandfather, recalls the conversations of his mother in which she described the superb character and lovely home-life of her father, a beautiful and sufficient tribute to his memory.

He died in this city, January 7, 1839, and his remains were interred in Congressional but later removed to Oak Hill Cemetery.

Moy, Joe
d. 17 Jan 1910

The Evening Star, January 16, 1910
With Oriental Rites
Funeral of Moy Joe to be Held Tomorrow
Chinese Symbols to Decorate the Coffin and Feast Will be Ready at the Grave

With every touch of the orient which can possibly be added to a Washington funeral train, the body of Moy Joe will be taken to Congressional cemetery tomorrow afternoon. All the relatives and friends of Moy Joe—and there are a great many of them—will follow the hearse. Moy Joe's body will rest in a coffin decorated with Chinese symbols wrought of paper flowers and odd-looking inscriptions on odd paper of far eastern make.

One of Moy Joe's countrymen will ride upon the hearse and will make a startling figure as he scatters imitation money to the four winds of heaven. He will be "buying off" the evil spirits, who might otherwise interfere with the passage of Moy Joe's spirit to its rightful resting place.

At the grave a grand feast will be found waiting for the spirit before it takes its journey across the mystic chasm. There will be roast duck, roast chicken, sweetmeats, rice and tea, and there will also be a fire built somewhere near the grave. The last is one of the Chinese customs used at all funerals.

Moy Joe was at one time a laundryman, but he made enough money to sell out and retire to the Chinese quarter. He developed tuberculosis and, learning the probably outcome of it, he devoted his time to every effort possible at prolonging his life.

He died Thursday at Sibley Hospital.

The Evening Star

He had known Moy Joe, for the man had fluttered back and forth, hesitating between his own gods and Dr. McMasters' God for many months before he finally decided to shave off his queue and become Christian. So he could speak about Moy Joe with some feeling—and he did.

Old Chinamen Amused
Then three boys—Moy's own countrymen—sang a hymn. A gray queued Chinaman, leaning against the back of the chapel, laughed and said something aloud to another old Chinaman half way up the aisle, who turned and grinned. They took no interest—they were Moy Joe's friends, and had known him in Canton—but Moy Joe had turned Christian and had broken away from everything that had held him a friend to them.

And then Yee Li, a very small China boy stood up and read something from a book. He, too, spoke his own tongue. He stood very near the open coffin, and now and again looked into it. The half dozen Chinamen from the Sunday school, who had come with American clothes, paid strict attention to him. The older men, those who have not yet broken away from the religion of their fathers, listened to him with apparent unconcern.

A young man standing up near the back of the chapel asked a gray old Chinaman what the boy read:
"Him cracy," said the old man.
"What is he reading," asked the young man of another Chinaman. For an answer he got a shrug.

She Knew
A woman who had been shifting noisily about, craning her neck to see what was going on said she knew what the boy was reading:
"He's reciting a Buddhist prayer," she volunteered in a loud whisper.
"Ain't it a shame?" replied a companion who had just dropped in out of sheer curiosity.
"Sly things," mumbled the other one.
"The Buddhist prayer" that Yee Li was reading slowly and with all the feeling at his command was the Twenty-third Psalm.

Six Chinamen carried the coffin from the chapel to the street. On the sidewalk another curious crowd stood. Some of Moy Joe's native friends crowded into the three carriages provided and the little procession started toward the cemetery.

An Old Friend's Tribute

Interments in the Historic Congressional Cemetery

Last Updated: 2/12/2015
As the drivers clucked to their horses one of the gray-queued Chinamen who had known Moy Joe before he had become a Christian ran out to the curb with a bundle in his arms. The hearse stopped. The old man who had smiled at the Christian prayer and had paid no attention to the service or the flowers handed up to the driver a basket in which were tea and rice, a bottle of Canton rice wine of a kind so rare that it is scarcely ever seen in America, and sweet meats.

This was the old man's tribute. It was like the things they had put on the grave of Moy Joe's father and his mother and their parents and grandparents in China for countless generations back. The old man did not understand the flowers--nor the Twenty-third Psalm--but he knew the ways of his kind, and when they put those few sweet meats of his on the grave it expressed exactly as much as it does when some one else puts thousands of American Beauties at the door of some tomb.

Moy, Sam
d. 23 Dec 1905

Suicide of Chinaman
Sam Moy Hangs Himself in His Laundry
Had Been Despondent
Lack of Money Ascribed as the Cause
Had Been Anxious to Return to China --
Statement Made by His Brother

Patrons of the Chinese laundry at the corner of 25th and K streets northwest finding the laundry closed last night, made an investigation and discovered by peering through a rear window the form of the proprietor hanging by a rope from a rafter in the kitchen. The police were notified, and, forcing their way into the laundry, they found the dead body of Sam Moy. Coroner Nevitt was notified. After he had reviewed the remains the coroner stated that he would give a certificate of suicide. A brother of the dead man, known as Moy Soon, took charge of the remains and they were turned over to Undertaker Lee to be prepared for burial. Discouragement is assigned as the cause for the suicide.

Sam Moy, the dead Chinaman, had been in this country for about fifteen years according to his brother. Most of that time was spent in the north, mostly in Boston. He returned to his native country about five years ago, but came back to the United States after a short stay. Six or seven months ago he came here to see his brother, Moy Soon, who keeps a laundry at 1226 I street northwest. The brother offered to set Sam Moy up in business and purchased for him the laundry at the corner of 25th and K streets northwest and he had been conducting a good business there for the past six months.

Sam Moy was last seen alive by his brother late Friday evening. He went to see his brother and they walked over to the corner of 25th and K streets together to talk business. At that time, the brother stated to a Star reporter last night, Sam complained of not feeling well, or as the brother expressed it: "Belly feel sickie; no good." Sam also showed signs of being discouraged and despondent. He had a wife in China and he has been anxious to back to see her. Friday evening he talked a good deal about a trip to China and complained that he did not have money enough to meet the expense. Another thing which added to his despondency was that a friend named John Suay, returned to China recently and Sam Moy had wished to accompany him, but was unable to do so, his lack of means forbidding. There was nothing said at this last talk between brothers about committing suicide, however.

Closed During Day
According to the neighbors, the laundry kept by Sam Moy was closed most of the day yesterday. Patrons who visited it in the afternoon found all the doors locked, but attributed it to some peculiarity of the Chinaman. About 9:30 o'clock last night, however, some of the patrons grew curious, as stated, and made an investigation. One window was not covered up, that in the laundry on the K street side. The gas jet was burning dimly and in that light they could see the form of a man suspended in the air.

Police Notified
The alarm was given to the police in two ways. Policemen Newton and Dulin, the men on the beat, while at 24th and H streets, were told by an excited colored woman, who was at the laundry, that a Chinaman was dead. The station house was also notified by some neighbors. The two officers named, who hastened to the scene, found all the doors and windows of the laundry closely barred and locked. They forced open the front door, and, stepping back through the office and a middle room, they discovered the body of the dead Chinaman hanging in the rear room, used as a kitchen.

There was every indication that the man had caused his own death. A gas pipe which led down from the ceiling was bent under a rafter which ran across the room about a foot below the ceiling, as if to reinforce the strength of the beam. A towel was carefully wrapped around the rafter to prevent the sharp edges from cutting the rope. Making the rope secure about the rafter and the gas pipe where the towel was placed, he had evident slipped a noose over his head. In order to get away from the floor he placed two soap boxes in position, one on top of the other. After the rope had been adjusted about his neck he had kicked one of the boxes from under him, clearing the other by fully a foot.

Before he hanged himself it is believed he made careful preparations against discovery. At the front windows he tacked up large sheets, hiding out the view from the street. He closed the blinds of the windows on the outside. At the rear window of the room in which he hanged himself he hung up a blanket, but it failed to entirely cover the window, thus leaving the opening through which his suspended body was discovered. All the doors and windows were locked from the inside.

Dressed in His Best
When found Sam was dressed in his best American clothes. In one of the pockets of his coat was found twenty $1 bills. The finding of money on his person and in the cash drawer of the shop dispelled the rumors which were abroad that he had been robbed. The money, which the brother claimed to have seen on the night before suicide, was all found.

The dead man's brother, after finishing his day's work at his laundry at 1226 I street northwest, went to the laundry at 25th and K streets about 9 o'clock last night accompanied by three friends. When they found that it was closed up they determined to ask the police to help them to get into the laundry. They went to the third precinct station house and were explaining their troubles when the report of the suicide reached the station, and they were detained there until the matter was investigated. Later they were taken to the laundry, and were shown the body of their dead countryman.

The brother gave one look at the body and then left the room.

The four Chinamen talked over the situation in their own language, and then the spokesman told Lieutenant Boyle of the third precinct who had taken charge in person, that they regarded it as a case of suicide. They had little more to say, except that they would take charge of the body, and they subsequently notified the undertaker to come for it.

His Brother's Statement
His brother stated that Sam Moy was thirty-six or thirty-seven years old and that he had a wife in China. He said he had furnished the money for buying the laundry, and the entire affairs of the place and its contents were turned over to him.

Several anxious patrons called late last evening and were given packages of laundry, for which the brother of the dead man collected. There was every indication that the dead man had been doing a prosperous business. His shelves were filled with packages of laundry and in the wash room there was a large number of shirts hanging on the line to dry.

"I have been in the police department for thirty-one years, and this is the first Chinaman I remember who hung himself," was the comment of Lieut. Boyle of the third precinct, after investigating the suicide. One of the countrymen of the dead man also added that very few Chinamen killed themselves by hanging.

The news of the suicide spread rapidly through the neighborhood and a curious crowd gathered about the laundry. Policeman Em brey of the third precinct was stationed outside and he kept back the crowd. Detective Weedon was sent from police headquarters to investigate the case, but he was soon satisfied that it was a case of suicide and returned to the bureau.

The Evening Star, February 25, 1905
Funeral of Sam Moy,
Interment Tomorrow of Chinaman Who Committed Suicide
All that is mortal of Sam Moy, the Chinese laundryman who committed suicide Saturday by hanging himself, as printed in the Sunday Star, will be buried in Congressional cemetery tomorrow afternoon. The hour at which the funeral is to take place has been fixed at 2 o'clock, but a change may be made in the hour before tomorrow. When friends and relatives of Sam learned of the suicide they hurried to his business place to prevent the removal of the body to the morgue.

"Don't like looks of dead house," remarked one of Sam's friends. "Put all kinds of people in there and no good place for a Chinaman."

They succeeded in their efforts and the remains of their friend and relative found room at the undertaking establishment of J. William Lee, 333 Pennsylvania avenue. Moy was dressed and his body placed in a casket.
There was a time when the funeral of a Chinaman in this city attracted a curious crowd of persons to the cemetery, but so many of the almond-eyed celestials have died and been buried here that such funerals are no longer a novelty. Chinamen dislike publicity at funerals of their countrymen and they invariably try to hold the ceremonies at an hour when they think there will be but a few curious persons at the cemetery. The distribution of imitation money along the streets between the undertaking establishment and the cemetery always attracts the small boys, who pick it up as fast as it is dropped. Then at the grave comes the interesting ceremony of offering good things to tempt the evil spirits and the destruction of garments and other personal effects of the deceased. Some time in the future all the bodies of Chinamen that are buried here will be disinterred and the bone's removed to China. Most of those who have died in this city had wives in their native land, and the widows hope the bones of their loved ones will reach China before they have passed away.

Funeral of Sam Moy

Remains Followed by Friends to Grave in Congressional Cemetery

The funeral of Sam Moy, the Chinese laundryman who committed suicide Saturday, attracted a number of curious persons to Congressional cemetery yesterday afternoon. Seated on the hearse beside the driver was a Chinese friend of the deceased, who dropped imitation money along the street for the purpose of attracting the evil spirits. These "spirits," in the form of men, women and children, appeared and gathered the slips of paper to keep as souvenirs of the funeral.

Several ladies and three Chinamen occupied the two carriages which followed the corpse, one of the latter caring for a basket of cooked food that had been prepared in one of the restaurants in "Chinatown." Upon reaching the cemetery and seeing a hundred or more curious persons the Chinese mourners decided to make a change in the burial ceremony to prevent the curiosity of the crowd. Instead of burning the dead man's effects and setting fire to bunches of punk upon the grave they lowered the articles into the grave with the basket of food, one of them made a few remarks over the open grave and the ceremony was concluded.

<td>Holding that the exception in the new drug law, allowing the sale of preparations containing opium and similar substances to be used as a liniment or ointment, did not apply to pure drugs such as laudanum. Judge Kimball in the Police Court today held Charles S. Walters, a druggist at 901 4 1/2 street southwest, guilty of violating the drug law in selling, without a prescription, laudanum to James Mugg, by which he latter committed suicide, and fined the druggist $5 for the offense.</td>

<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>In the trial of the case it was shown that the druggist thought he was acting under the exception of he law when he sold the laudanum to Mugg, and put on the bottle “For External Use Only.” A statement was presented to the court from the Health Officer Woodward declaring that pure laudanum is never used as a liniment or ointment by itself, and on this statement the decision of the case largely rested.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“It would practically nullify the whole law if I should hold that the contention of this defendant was right,” said Judge Kimball. “The law makes an exception in cases of preparations containing opium or laudanum, when such preparations are to be used as ointments or liniments, but it says nothing about the pure drugs. If pure drugs were allowed to be sold for external use all those who wanted the drugs would buy them for external use, but would use them internally.”</td>

The Evening Star, August 27, 1929
Judge Mullowny Dies at Residence

Member of Local Bar Served for Many Years as Assistant U.S. Attorney

Alexander Richmond Mullowny, prominent member of the local bar, former judge of the Police Court and for many years assistant United States attorney for the District of Columbia, died at 6 o'clock last night at his residence, 6300 Connecticut avenue.

Judge Mullowny, who was 65 years of age, was born in Richmond, Va., August 29, 1865, the son of John F. Mullowny, who was in the United States consular service. Coming to this city at an early age, Judge Mullowny attended the public schools and law school. He was also a student of architecture. In the practice of law, Judge Mullowny soon attracted attention. It was not long before he was tendered and accepted an appointment as assistant United States attorney. As such he was assigned to take charge of the prosecution of all United States cases in the Police Court and as such earned an enviable reputation. He had an unusually long term of service, 14 years. Toward the end he was transferred to the main office and prepared all the indictments after "true bills" had been decided on by the grand jury.

He was selected by the then President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, October 5, 1905, to be one of the two judges of the Police Court. His long service as prosecuting attorney in the court and his judgment of human nature eminently fitted him for the position on the bench.

After serving until October, 1918--13 years--Judge Mullowny left the bench and resumed private practice, in which he was engaged until his death. He underwent a surgical operation last June, from which he did not recover.

Surviving Judge Mullowny are his wife, who was Miss Marie Thomas, and one daughter, Miss Kathryn Mullowny. Judge Mullowny was active as a member of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia and was a member of B.B. French Lodge, No. 15, F.A.A.M.

Arrangements for the funeral have not bee completed.

Judicial notice of the death of Judge Mullowny was taken today by Justice Alfred A. Wheat, presiding in the District Supreme Court, by directing that the minutes of the court show an adjournment out of respect to the deceased jurist.

Judge Mullowny's death was called to the attention of the court by Attorney D. Edward Clarke, who spoke briefly of the legal ability and attainments of the deceased and asked that the usual notice of adjournment be made on the records of the court.

In granting the motion, Justice Wheat said that before he had gone to practice in New York he knew Judge Mullowny and admired him. He expressed his sincere sorrow at the death of the former judge.

Also out of respect to the memory of Judge Mullowny, judges of Police Court announced that various branches would adjourn early today as soon as jail cases were disposed of.

Junior Judge, Police Court

Judge Alexander Richmond Mullowny, the junior member of the Police Court bench, is a trained lawyer, possessed of a ripe judgment, quick perception and a judge of human nature that enables him to easily determine the truth and falsity of the great bulk of evidence that daily comes before him for determination. His legal decisions are always sound and tempered with justice. He is no respector of persons by reason of social, financial or political status, weighing every case that comes up before him in the scales of justice that leaves no criticism possible.

A sort time after reaching his majority he was appointed Assistant United States District Attorney for the Police Court, in which position he served with marked ability for a number of years, until he was promoted to the bench. He is a native of Richmond, Va., where he was born August 24, 1864, being now 44 years old. He comes from a pure strain of old Irish stock that traces its ancestry back through many centuries. His father was a son of Commodore Mullowny of the United States Navy; his mother in her girlhood days was the belle of Washington. His father and grandfather were intimate personal friends of Daniel Webster, and on the occasion of his father's marriage the bridal party was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Webster at their bridal dinner in the Webster home, that stood on the east half of the present site of the Police Court D and Sixth streets northwest, then the most fashionable section of the city. Webster's home at that time was one of the finest in the city and the center of literary, art, diplomacy and statesmanship sets of the day.

Judge Mullowny some years ago organized the Irish Legation, composed of citizens of the District of Irish ancestry who could trace their lineage to the dim distance of the greatness of the Emerald Isle when it was governed by the old line of Irish kings. This organization meets annually on Ireland's Patron Saint day--March 17--to discuss a royal Irish dinner, genealogy of the race and their line of ancestry. He is prominently identified with the Masonic Order, being a member of Benjamin B. French Lodge, Columbia Commandery, Knights Templar, Washington Royal Arch. In addition to this, he is active in athletics as a member of the Columbia Athletic Association. In civic matters he takes a lively interest, being a member of the Business Men's Associations of this city.

He was educated in the public schools of this city and received his legal education at the National University of Law, from which he graduated in 1887 with the degree of B.L. He was appointed judge of the Police Court by President Roosevelt December 21, 1905, succeeding Judge Scott, who had died in office.

Personally Judge Mullowny is a genial young man, standing high with the bench and bar of the District, and enjoying the confidence and friendship of a host of friends in all walks of life, who pronounce him a royal fellow. On average he hears 10,000 cases annually.

Mullowny Resigns

Judge of Police Court Highly Complimented

Upon the receipt of his commission late yesterday as judge of the Police Court Alexander R. Mullowny tendered his resignation as assistant United States attorney for the District of Columbia, and subscribed to the oath of office as judge. The oath was administered by Chief Justice Clabaugh of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

United States Attorney Baker today addressed a communication to Judge Mullowny accepting with regret his resignation as an assistant, and saying many complimentary things of his able efforts in the past, and predicting for the new jurist a most useful and successful future.

Judge Mullowny will take the Police Court bench for the first time next Monday morning.

No steps have yet been taken by United States Attorney Baker to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Mullowny as assistant United States attorney for the District of Columbia.

Mundell. The funeral of Samuel Mundell, aged 14 years, will take place from the residence of his parents, Marine Barracks this afternoon at 4 o'clock. The friends of the family are respectfully invited to attend.

_The National Intelligencer, Sept. 19, 1851_

A melancholy occurrence took place on Wednesday evening, nearly opposite the Washington Navy Yard, by which a worthy family is involved in deep grief on the sudden and violent death of an interesting son.

It appears that a party, consisting of three men and two boys, all attached to the Marine Garrison, proceeded on a gunning excursion. There were but three guns. William Wells, a private in the Marine Corps, was extremely desirous to obtain from Samuel Mundell, the deceased, his fowling piece, which was repeatedly refused. On their arrival at the grounds of Mr. Atchinson, an altercation ensued between Wells and young Mundell, during which the latter raised his gun in a menacing position, when Wells sprung towards him, seized the piece with one hand, raised it as if he intended to knock the boy down, then fell back a short distance, cocked it, took deliberate aim and fired, lodging the contents of the gun in the left side of young Mundell's neck, breaking the collarbone, severing the arteries, and cutting the windpipe in two. The boy died instantly.

The party soon returned to the Barracks, and Wells candidly confessed the commission of the deed in terms which certainly reflected no credit upon human nature. The body of the unfortunate boy was brought in and laid out in the Garrison Hospital.

Justice Crandall was soon at the Garrison, after a brief hearing committed Wells to jail, whither he was conveyed by officers Wheat, Willett, and Adams.

This morning Mr. Woodward, the coroner, held an inquest, which resulted in the rendition of the following verdict: "That the said Samuel Mundell, aged fourteen years, came to his death by a gun-shot wound in the left shoulder, fired from a gun in the hands of William Wells, a marine, on the evening of Wednesday, September 17, 1851; the said Wells having fired at the said Mundell whilst under the influence of passion; the said gun being wrested from the hands of said Mundell by Wells previous to his firing."

We understand that Wells was formerly in the Marine corps, and that he re-enlisted on the 16th June last. The records of the Adjutant's office show him to be a native of Baltimore.

Young Mundell is a son of Orderly Sergeant Joseph Mundell, universally respected as a most excellent officer and citizen.

It is understood that the funeral will take place from the Garrison, this afternoon, at four o'clock.

_Criminal Court._

The trial of William Wells, a private of the Marine Corps, indicted for the murder of a youth named Samuel Mundell, on the 17th of September last, is now going on in this court. It will be recollected that the locale of the deed was on the south side of the Eastern Branch, opposite the Navy Yard, and, as has been alleged, the parties were out gunning, when Wells, asking to shoot at some object demanded of young Mundell his gun for the purpose, Wells having no gun of his own. On Mundell refusing and resisting, Wells wrested away the gun by main force, and, pointing it at Mundell, shot him instantly dead. The case will probably occupy several days.

_The National Intelligencer, February 10, 1852_

_Sentence of Death._

Yesterday having been the day on which the answer of Judge Crawford was expected to the application of the counsel of William Wells (found guilty of the willful murder of Samuel Mundell, on the 17th of September last) for a new trial, that decision was accordingly made. The exceptions taken by the prisoner's counsel to the trial were all overruled by the Judge.

The Judge then, in compliance with the prisoner's expressed wish through his counsel to know the worst, pronounced sentence of death, the execution to take place on the twenty-third day of April next. The Judge, in performing this awful duty, addressed the prisoner feelingly on the circumstances of his crime, trial, present condition, and future prospects, recommending him to seek without delay his reconciliation with an offended God. The Court was filled with an auditory deeply impressed with the solemn scene.

Death of Seaton Munroe
A Well-Known Washingtonian Expires Suddenly
An Autopsy Ordered to Settle Rumors that the Deceased Committed Suicide
Mr. Seaton Munroe died suddenly last night at the Hotel Arno, on 16th street. He entered the buffet of the hotel shortly before 11 o'clock and conversed for some time with Mr. Philip Roche, the proprietor. He was bright and cheerful, and went out apparently on his way home. He stopped, however, in the wash room, and it was here that he was stricken, for his dead body was found in this apartment by Mr. Roche at midnight. Dr. Acker was immediately called in, and in the meantime efforts were made to resuscitate Mr. Munroe, but he was beyond all aid, and when the doctor arrived he pronounced him dead. The body was taken in charge by the authorities, and Mr. Munroe's friends and relatives were notified, whereupon the remains were removed to Gawler's undertaking establishment, where they were viewed today by Coroner Hammett. Dr. Hammett said there was no doubt that Mr. Munroe's death had been caused by a stroke of apoplexy, but that in order to set at rest the suggestions that had been given publication to the effect that the dead man had committed suicide he would have an autopsy performed, and for this purpose he notified Dr. Glazebrook, who will make the examination this afternoon.

The funeral arrangements were taken in charge by Co. Malcolm Seaton, an uncle of the deceased, who was very much affected by the death of his nephew. The funeral will take place from All Souls' Church next Monday afternoon, and the pallbearers will be selected from the members of the Metropolitan Club, of which Mr. Munroe had been a member since 1871, and his numerous friends outside of that organization.

Mr. Munroe was about sixty years of age, and from the time he entered his teens was one of the best-known people in Washington, a leader in fashionable society and a welcomed guest to all gatherings. He was the son of Columbus Munroe, a leading citizen of the District, and his mother was Josephine Seaton, the daughter of W.W. Seaton, who, with Joseph Gales, published the famous National Intelligencer. Young Munroe was finely educated, and after completing his classical courses was graduated from the Harvard law school, and, while regarded as a lawyer of superior attainments, he did not practice his profession for any length of time. He was a man of extreme genial disposition and elegant manners, and was a general favorite in club and special circles here for a third of a century. During the past few days he had been particularly bright and cheerful over the appearance in the North American Review of an article written by him, entitled "Recollections of Lincoln's Assassination." He spent Thursday evening visiting among his friends, including Mr. John A. Baker, and was in the best of spirits. His numerous friends are very indignant over the reports that Mr. Munroe had committed suicide, and especially was this the case among the members of the Metropolitan Club. Mr. Munroe had never married. His mother survives him, and resides in Maryland. He was connected by close ties of relationship with nearly all the leading families of the District, including the Hagners, the Hills, the Randalls, the Ramsays and others of high standing and distinction.

Munroe attended the inquest on John Wilkes Booth aboard the U.S.S. Montauk. Seaton was the brother of Frank, and in spite of Secretary of War Stanton's tight security orders, Munroe was able to walk aboard the ship. Munroe's description of Booth's body was far different than the descriptions given by the other witnesses. Munroe stated that Booth's corpse was "unmarred by the agony of death and his handsome countenance also unmarred."

<td>Mrs. Nellie Murphy ended her life yesterday afternoon by shooting herself through the heart after she had written the foregoing message to her husband and left it on the sideboard at her home, 241 Virginia avenue southwest. The deed was committed, it is thought, as the result of a disordered brain. Mrs. Murphy had been an epileptic for a number of years. Her condition, it is believed, was made worse Thursday night when she witnessed the fatal accident to Engineer Kates in front of her home. Shortly after the accident occurred she saw the mangled body of the engineer, and when she returned home she had a spasm. All night and all day Friday she walked the floor. Yesterday she was in no better condition, and her husband, who is a contracting painter, remained at home most of the day. Early yesterday morning Mr. Murphy was awakened by hearing a loud noise in his dining room, and when he went to investigate he found his wife had attempted suicide by inhaling illuminating gas through a rubber tube attachment that was connected with the cooking stove. Later she made a feeble attempt to end her life by cutting her wrist with a razor. During the day she managed to escape observation long enough to purchase a cheap revolver. She had the weapon concealed in the house without her husband's knowledge. Shortly before 2 o'clock in the afternoon the husband had occasion to leave the house for a short while, and before going he said to his wife: &quot;Be a good girl while I'm gone.&quot; She promised she would and he went away satisfied. Makes Horrible Discovery When he returned to the house about thirty minutes later he was horrified to find his wife's remains on the floor of the room that was used as dining room and kitchen, and almost upon the very spot that she had fallen early in the morning when she had made an effort to end her life by inhaling gas. On the floor near her body was the weapon with which the deed had been committed. A policeman was summoned and took charge of the weapon and the note Mrs. Murphy had written. Dr. Nevitt, the coroner, went to the house and made an investigation. He gave the necessary certificate of death and the body was removed to the undertaking establishment of W.H. Scott &amp; Co., 409 8th street southwest. Mrs. Murphy was thirty-eight years of age, and she was Mr. Murphy's second wife. She came to this city more than fifteen years ago from Ames, Mass., where two of her sisters now reside. It is stated that the unfortunate woman made an effort to end her life several years ago by taking poison. Her funeral will probably take place Monday afternoon from an undertaking establishment. The interment will be at Congressional cemetery.</td>

Death of an Old Citizen
The death of Mr. John R. Murray, a well-known citizen of this District, took place last night about midnight, at the family residence, No. 217 4 1/2 street northwest, after a protracted illness. Mr. Murray was one of the old citizens of the District, being 72 years of age, and having lived here the best part of his life. He was formerly well known as an enterprising business man. He was a native of Charles county, Maryland, but when quite young moved to Culpepper Courthouse, Virginia, where he lived till 21 years old, when he went to Texas and engaged in mercantile pursuits. He returned and came to this city in 1843, where he commenced business on the site where Mr. Frank Hume's store is now located, on Pennsylvania avenue, between 4 1/2 and 6th streets, under the firm title of Murray, Randolph & Semmes. This business firm lasted one year, when Mr. Randolph drew out, and the business was continued at the same place under the name of Murray & Semmes, the last-named being the well-known grocer corner 9th street and Louisiana avenue. In 1848 Mr. Semmes opened a branch at the place where he is now in business under the firm title of J.H. Semmes & Co., the old business continuing under the same name twenty-one years. The partnership was dissolved in 1864, when Mr. Murray retired from business. He has ever maintained the confidence and respect of the citizens of this District, many of whom will be pained to hear of his decease. The funeral will take place Saturday.

Murray. Suddenly, on Monday, April 6, 1903, at 5:30 p.m., Joseph Murray.
Thy hands are folded across thy breast,
Life's toils are over, thy soul with the blest.
Sleep on, dear Joseph, and take thy rest;
May your slumbers be sweet on the Savior's breast.

'Tis hard to break the tender cord
When love has bound the heart;
'Tis hard, so awful hard to say
We must forever part.
None knew him but to love him,
None knew him but to praise.
By Mamie

Farewell, dear uncle, a long farewell,
For we shall meet no more
Until we are raised with thee to dwell
On Zion's happy shore.
Gone in the best of his days,
Blighted in manhood's bloom,
Turn from the hearts that loved him
To sleep in the silent tomb.

By His Nephew and Niece, J.H. and J.M. King.
Funeral from residence of his sister, 406 Virginia avenue southeast, Friday, April 10, at 4 p.m.

Cut His Own Throat
G.W. Meyers, Former Saloon-keeper, Commits Suicide
Place of Business at Jackson City Recently Destroyed by Fire--Used a Razor
George W. Meyers, a former saloonkeeper at Jackson City, committed suicide at his home, 1349 Kenyon street, Mount Pleasant, about 5:30 o'clock this morning by cutting his throat with a razor. He died before a physician reached the house. Meyers' original place of business at Jackson City, his wife told the police, was destroyed by fire only a few weeks ago. For several days, she stated, he had been drinking, but had given her no reason to suspect that he contemplated taking his life.

Shortly after 5 o'clock this morning Meyers arose and got his clothing together preparatory to dressing. Calling his wife from her room he asked her if she would get him a clean pair of socks. When she had given these to him he asked for an article of underwear. Mrs. Meyers went to an adjoining room to get the garment, and her back was hardly turned before she heard a noise caused by the falling of her husband to the floor. Rushing into the room to ascertain what caused the noise the woman saw her husband lying on the floor with a terrible gash in his throat. On the floor near him was a razor. Blood was gushing from the wound which extended almost from ear to ear, and the dying man was unable to utter a word.

Leaving the house the woman ran to the street and screamed for help. Policemen Hollidge, Hackett and Gibson, who were in the neighborhood, answered the woman's appeal. They summoned Dr. A.J. Carrico of 3214 14th street, and although no time was lost in reaching the house life was extinct when he arrived. The Emergency Hospital ambulance was also called, but the vehicle returned with the doctors to the hospital without the body.

Inquest Unnecessary
Meyers was fifty-seven years old and leaves a wife and two grown children, who were at home this morning when the tragedy was enacted. One of them, a daughter twenty-seven years old, is married. Coroner Nevitt was notified of the case and he visited the house early this morning. He heard statements of those who were in the house at the time the fatal injury was inflicted and gave a certificate of death from a self-inflicted wound.

The deceased was well known in sporting circles, having been in the policy business in Jackson City for many years. He was one of the Jackson City pioneers, having been one of the first to enter business there after the policy men were forced out of business in this city. After the destruction of his place by fire he was told that he might rebuild and renew his business, while others were warned that they could never again transact business there. He did, in a small way, business at another stand after his own place was destroyed. His many friends were shocked at the news of his death.

Meyers, it is stated, was well known to the sporting fraternity in many cities. Arrangements for his funeral will be made this afternoon.

Hugh Myers Dead
The Man on Whom the Elixir Was Tried Dies--
The Physician's Certificate
Hugh Myers, the man who took an injection of the elixir of life two weeks ago, and of whose illness The Star yesterday gave a report died yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock. The idea that death was caused by the elixir, which was administered by Dr. Hamilton E. Leach, has largely faded out in the minds of the people of South Washington, and public opinion will, in the main, concur with Dr. Harrison Crook's certificate of death, which will state that Myers' decease was due to typhoid fever, aggravated by Bright's disease, chronic rheumatism, and a serious affection of the heart. The dead man's eldest daughter this morning expressed herself as fully satisfied with the treatment of the case and most emphatically refused to allow an autopsy to be performed. Just before Myers' wife died, sixteen months ago, the husband told her that he would follow her soon, and this agreement he has undoubtedly kept. The funeral services will be held next Sunday afternoon and until that time the remains will rest at 47 E street southwest. Lincoln post, G.A.R., will have charge of the internment and the ceremonies consequent thereon.

_Did The Elixir Do It?_
_A Man Who Received a Dose of it Dying in South Washington_
_Members of His Family Inclined to Attribute His Condition to the Elixir--_
_He is Said, However, to Have Many Other Ailments Likely to Kill Him--_
_A Sensation in the Southwest_

In the front room in a two-story brick house, No. 470 E street southwest, is the almost if not quite lifeless body of Hugh Myers, and his condition is today being discussed considerably in South Washington. On the 14th instant, Myers, who was a constant sufferer from rheumatism, called at the office of Dr. Hamilton E. Leach and requested that surgeon to give him an injection of the Brown-Sequard elixir. This, he believed, would rid him of some of his ailments, and now the family and neighbors say it undoubtedly has. The doctor hesitated for some time before he decided to accede to the request of Myers, but finally concluded that it was a good opportunity to test the merits of the alleged discovery, and that same evening procured the necessary materials from a slaughtered ram. The elixir was compounded according to the great physicians' prescription, and in less than half an hour from the dissection of the parts Dr. Leach had injected into Myers' left arm twenty drops of the elixir of life. This was done in the presence of Dr. Harrison Crook, who had been called in by Dr. Leach to witness the operation. Myers said he felt better almost immediately after the injection and went to attend to his duties as a night watchman on 7th street. Today Myers is dying--possibly by this time dead--and while he has been afflicted by a number of dangerous diseases, any one of them sufficient to cause his death, the neighbors insist that the end has come prematurely and is due to the so-called "elixir."

_Statements of Myers' Relatives_

The conditions and symptoms, which have developed from time of the injection up to today, were readily given to a Star reporter by members of Myers' family. One of Myers' sisters, who resides in South Washington said she saw him on Thursday morning, the day following the operation and he said to her: "I had that stuff thrown into me last night."

"What stuff?" she asked.

"That elixir of life they're talking about so much nowadays."

"What did you do that for?" was her next query.

"Well," he said, "I believed it might make me well. People told me it would cure me, but it don't seem to be doing it."

"Right after I took it I walked up to the corner of 7th and E streets and there I almost fell down. My legs were almost useless and I staggered against the fire plug. I was blind for half an hour."

"Did that do it?" asked his sister, meaning by "that" the elixir.

"I don't know," he replied, "it might have been that; if it was I'll never say a word about it."

His sister then told him he ought not to have permitted such an operation because his blood was in such bad condition that he might have known he couldn't stand such a powerful change.

_What Occurred After the Injection_

The injection was given on a Wednesday evening. No beneficial results were visible or felt, but when Myers returned home early on Friday morning his eldest daughter was surprised to see that he staggered. He was not a drinking man but she did not say anything then. After a while he lay down on his bed and he made very peculiar noises. He seemed to be in pain, and when at length his daughter went to him and asked him what was the matter he said he was freezing; that he felt as though there was a lump of ice on his heart. Following the chill came fever and then there was a succession of chills and fever and typhoid fever came and stopped the chills. This complicated matters considerably, for Myers was previously a long sufferer from rheumatism, and had, beyond question, Bright's disease and a serious accompanying affection of the heart. For these ailments Dr. Leach had been treating him for some time, and it is these which Dr. Crook says are carrying him off. Myers complained continually of the pain which was in his left arm (the arm into which the dose had been injected), and on Sunday the second finger of his left hand swelled up to a considerable size. It hurt Myers not a little, so on Monday he asked one of his sisters to get a needle and let out some of the purulent matter. She did so and the outflow was bloody pus and at the last a greenish-tinted semi-fluid. This, the family claimed was evidence of blood poisoning, attributable directly to the elixir, but the doctors dispute the statement.

No Signs of Blood Poisoning
There was no appearance of blood poisoning when The Star reporter went upstairs to look at the dying man. Not one of the symptoms of that dread disease could be seen anywhere. Myers has been delirious almost continuously ever since last Saturday week. Lucid intervals have been so rare and so brief that it has been impossible to consult with him as to his personal or spiritual affairs. He had purchased the house in which he lived and was supposed to have accumulated little money besides, but of this nothing is definitely known.

Around the Death Bed
Since 11 o'clock yesterday morning he has been entirely unconscious, and when the reporter left the room children, sisters and sympathizing friends were weeping over the form of one they loved. Their subdued cries and the heavy stertorous breathing of the dying man made the scene a painful one. At the foot of the narrow stairway, his face blistered with scalding tears, sat little eleven-year-old Joe--Myers' only boy--weeping as though his heart was broken and bringing tears afresh to many eyes by his sobbing cries of "Papa! Papa!". The other children are girls, one aged fifteen and the other only six. For sixteen months the little ones have been motherless and now they will be alone in the world.

Rev. Dr. Meador, pastor of the Fifth Baptist church, called this morning and did what he could to comfort the stricken ones.

What the Attending Physician Says
Dr. D.H. Hazen, who was called into the case this morning, was seen by a Star reporter this afternoon at 3 o'clock. He had just come from Myers' home, and said that death might be expected to enter there at any moment. When asked if he thought the patient was dying of blood poisoning caused by the elixir he said: "Had I been called into the case without any knowledge of its history I would not have suspected any blood poisoning or other exciting cause. Myers' condition was enemic, was weak, or he would not have submitted to the operation of injection."

When Dr. Leach went to Atlantic City with the Light Infantry he requested Dr. Crook to look after the case. Dr. Leach will probably return to the city tomorrow.

Dr. Crook stated to a Star reporter that the case was undoubtedly and indisputably one of typhoid fever, with which the elixir had simply nothing to do. If the elixir had caused it there would have been active blood poisoning.

Myers' Many Ailments
Hugh Myers was a soldier in the Union army during the war of the rebellion, but was discharged because of disability. He caught cold and it affected his eyes. Although he recovered completely from this trouble he never could sleep as he had previously, and two or three hours sleep was all he required; often one hour would satisfy him. About ten years ago he contracted rheumatism. He was then a member of the fire department of this city doing duty at engine house No. 4. The rheumatic affliction was principally in his left leg, which, after awhile, ulcerated to an excessive extent. He was retired from the department and took up the line of duty--night watchman--which he was following out when he was taken with his illness.

The Fatal Dose of Poison
Mrs. Minnie Myers' Startling Announcement to Her Neighbors
Standing at the front door of her home, No. 420 M street southeast, about 8:30 o'clock last night, Mrs. Minnie Myers announced to her neighbors that she had taken poison. She held an empty bottle and a glass in her hands, and the label on the bottle indicated that it had contained carbolic acid. The woman had taken about six ounces of the strong solution. A few minutes after she informed her neighbors of what she had done she was a corpse. Death occurred while the woman was being conveyed to Providence Hospital in the fifth precinct patrol wagon. When the doctors at the hospital pronounced life extinct the woman's body was taken to the morgue.

Mrs. Myers was thirty-five years old, and her maiden name was Thompson. She was born in South Carolina, where her relatives reside. Less than one year ago she became the wife of Charles Myers, who is employed in the Navy Yard. It is stated that she had been unhappy since her marriage, and had talked several times of ending her life. Friends who had heard her threaten to end her life paid but little attention to her statements, as they had no idea that she would put her threats into execution.

Yesterday and during the early hours of the night the young woman was alone in her house. Neighbors knew nothing of her movements until she appeared at the door and startled them with the statement: "I have taken poison." It is believed she gave them this information for the reason that she did not want to be alone when death claimed her.

Several of her neighbors entered the house and antidotes were administered, but without effect, for the acid had already done its deadly work. Policeman Raedy was called to the house and no time was lost in getting the patrol wagon.

A few minutes after the woman had been taken away her husband returned home and was horrified when informed of the rash act. Coroner Nevitt investigated the case and gave the necessary death certificate. Today the body of the woman was taken in charge by her husband for burial. Relatives of the deceased in South Carolina will be notified of her death.
